Spring 2016

D.C. Advantage

- What do students in this type of course do?
  Students participate in a weekly, subject-matter seminar (Business and Its Regulation or Government Lawyering) and conduct 25 or 30 hours of fieldwork per week at a judicial, governmental, or nonprofit field placement.

- Why might students choose to participate in this type of course?
  Students want to fully immerse themselves in the lawyering experience at an organization they're interested in.

- Who may participate?
  Students who have completed 1L year.

- How are students graded?
  Letter grade for the seminar, Pass/Fail grade for fieldwork.

- How do students enroll?
  After securing their own placements, students apply online, during the relevant application window, through the Joint J.D. Externships and D.C. Advantage Application.

- Eligible students will be admitted to D.C. Advantage practicum courses on a first-come, first-served basis until all seats are filled.

J.D. Externships

- What do students in this type of course do?
  Students participate in a seminar that meets 7 times throughout the semester and conduct 10 or 15 hours of fieldwork per week at a judicial, governmental, or nonprofit field placement.

- Why might students choose to participate in this type of course?
  Students want to "learn by doing" in a particular substantive area, while working alongside practicing attorneys to learn, observe, and exercise a wide range of lawyering skills in a specific practice area.

- Who may participate?
  Students who have completed 1L year.

- How are students graded?
  Letter grade for the seminar, Pass/Fail grade for fieldwork.

- How do students enroll?
  After securing their own placements, students apply online, during the relevant application window, through the Joint J.D. Externships and D.C. Advantage Application.

- Eligible students who apply during the application window are guaranteed a seat in an externship seminar.

- The waitlist will run until the last day of the Add/Drop period or until there's no more room left in the Externship Program, whichever comes first.
