TAPPED OUT
THREATS TO THE HUMAN RIGHT TO WATER
IN URBAN UNITED STATES

“I don’t think people get what it means in the context of the United States when you don’t have water.”

- Stephen Gasteyer, Assistant Professor, Michigan State University

Guest Speakers:
Darcey O’Callaghan, International Policy Director, Food and Water Watch
Marcus McKenzie, Senior Collections Analyst for D.C. Water

The 2012-2013 Georgetown University Law Center’s Human Rights Institute fact-finding mission investigated the affordability of water for low-income residents in urban United States. Through more than 70 interviews with affected residents, rate-makers, legislators, and practitioners in Detroit, Highland Park and Boston, the mission has documented how rising water costs, have forced many individuals to forgo running water or to sacrifice other essential human rights to secure them. The mission’s findings and accompanying policy recommendations will be publicly launched on:

Wednesday, April 17, 2013, 3:30-5:30pm
Georgetown University Law Center
