Executive Summary

Background

The pitched, battle-like atmosphere and tragic violence at the Unite the Right rally in Charlottesville, Virginia, on August 12, 2017, marked a turning point in this country and caused grief and alarm nationwide. Touted as an opportunity to protest the removal of a controversial Confederate statue, the event quickly escalated well beyond such constitutionally protected expression. Instead, private military forces transformed the college town into a virtual combat zone.

Several white nationalist groups arrived outfitted in helmets and matching uniforms and deployed shields, batons, clubs, and flagpoles as weapons in skirmishes with counter-protesters that the instigating groups coordinated under centralized command structures. Meanwhile, private militia groups—many dressed in camouflage fatigues, tactical vests, helmets, and combat boots, and most bearing assault rifles—stood guard as self-designated protectors of the protesters and counter-protesters. The heavily armed presence and coordinated paramilitary activities of all of these groups not only increased the prevalence of violence at the rally, but also made it more dangerous for state and local law enforcement to maintain public safety. Moreover, the attire and behavior of some of the self-professed militia led to confusion as to who was authorized to lawfully keep the peace.

On October 12, 2017, Georgetown University Law Center’s Institute for Constitutional Advocacy and Protection (ICAP), along with local counsel, filed suit on behalf of the City of Charlottesville, local businesses, and neighborhood associations in order to prevent these self-proclaimed militias and certain white nationalist groups from returning to Virginia and engaging in prohibited paramilitary conduct. The lawsuit alleged that the defendants violated key provisions of Virginia constitutional and statutory law that protect against private armies and paramilitary activity—laws intended to reinforce the fundamental tenet of civil society that the government must maintain a monopoly on the legitimate use of force for the protection of public safety. These laws prohibit the kind of disorder and chaos that occurred at the Unite the Right rally. ICAP’s lawsuit drew on historical precedent: in the 1980s, relying on the anti-militia provisions of Texas and North Carolina law, private plaintiffs successfully brought suits to prevent the local militia wings of the Ku Klux Klan from using paramilitary tactics against minority groups.¹ And it was successful, resulting in court orders permanently enjoining the defendants from returning to Charlottesville as part of a group of two or more people acting in concert while armed with any item whose purpose is for use as a weapon during any rally, protest, demonstration, or march.

This report identifies state constitutional provisions and/or statutory prohibitions that target similar private military and paramilitary conduct in each of the 50 states. Although the lawsuit filed in Charlottesville sought injunctive relief as an important tool for preventing a repeat of the unlawful paramilitary activity engaged in by the defendants in Virginia, these state laws also can be used proactively by localities across the country as a basis for lawful time, place, and manner restrictions designed to minimize violence at future rallies. Consistent with that approach, in October 2017 ICAP consulted with authorities in the cities of Murfreesboro and Shelbyville, Tennessee, to help them prepare for “White Lives Matter” rallies organized by the League of the South in their public spaces. ICAP helped these cities to identify and incorporate relevant Tennessee anti-paramilitary-activity laws into their event permits and conditions in a manner consistent with the First and Second Amendments to the U.S. Constitution. The Shelbyville rally concluded without significant violence and only one arrest; the Murfreesboro rally, planned for later the same day, was called off by its organizers entirely.

Since the Unite the Right rally, ICAP has consulted with numerous localities across the country, large and small, seeking to protect public safety while preserving constitutional rights. More recently, as protests against police brutality and racial injustice have spread in the wake of the killing of George Floyd, ICAP has consulted with concerned residents and activists who increasingly have reported that their peaceful marches and vigils have been met with intimidating militia members bearing assault rifles, dressed in military gear, and often shouting down their messages while purporting to be there to “keep the peace” or “protect” property. This usurpation of legitimate law enforcement and military functions is in violation of law in all 50 states, and dramatically increases the risk of violence during First Amendment-protected activity.

Findings

This report identifies, for each of the 50 states, the constitutional and statutory provisions relevant to paramilitary and private militia activity. Importantly, each state has at least one constitutional or statutory provision that applies to the type of paramilitary and private militia activity that may arise at future rallies similar to the Unite the Right rally in Charlottesville.

ICAP has categorized the relevant state laws into four groups: (1) constitutional provisions requiring the subordination of the military to civilian authorities; (2) statutes restricting unauthorized private militia activity; (3) anti-paramilitary-activity criminal laws; and (4) prohibitions on the false assumption of the uniform or duties of a peace officer or member of the military. The report describes these categories in more detail below and notes which states have statutes or constitutional provisions falling into each category. Following that summary is a chart listing each state’s relevant provisions, and finally each constitutional or statutory provision in full, organized by state. The chart also includes annotations of relevant case law.

In gathering these laws in one place, ICAP hopes to bring to the attention of states and localities a fuller range of tools on which to draw in preparing for and responding to rallies and other public events that raise public safety concerns. This report does not purport to catalog the wide range of additional statutes that may limit, within constitutional bounds, the behavior of those who plan, attend, and protest at rallies and other public events. Nor does the report address statutes that restrict the possession of firearms or limit local regulation of firearms, which also may be relevant to such events.² The report merely seeks to highlight four relevant categories of law that might otherwise be overlooked. Moreover, ICAP does not guarantee that the constitutional provisions and statutes included in this report exhaust the universe of state law applicable to paramilitary and private militia activity. To ensure accuracy,

Constitutional Subordination Clauses

Forty-eight states have constitutional provisions requiring the subordination of the military to civil authorities. The final clause of Article 1, section 13, of the Virginia state constitution is representative of these provisions: “in all cases the military should be under strict subordination to, and governed by, the civil power.” When private armies organize into military-style units that are neither responsible to, nor under the command of, the civil power of the state authorities, they may violate this constitutional command to the detriment of civil order.

48 STATE CONSTITUTIONS REQUIRE THE SUBORDINATION OF THE MILITARY

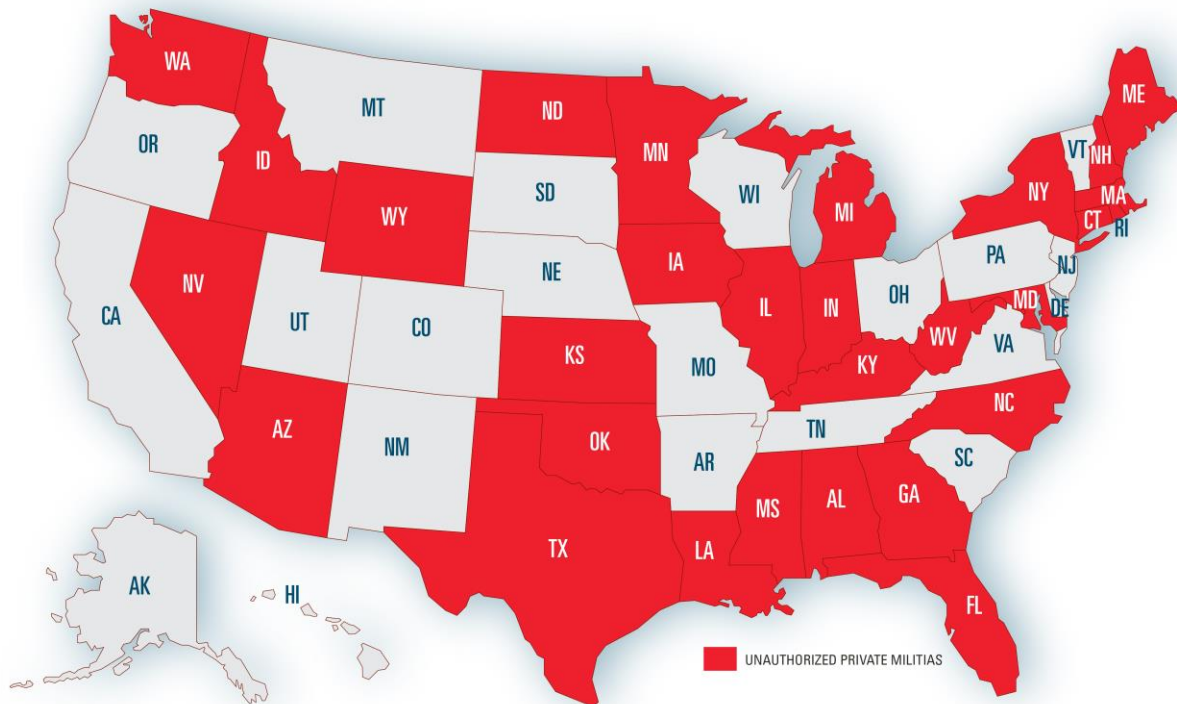

Unauthorized Private Militia Statutes

Twenty-nine states have statutes that prohibit groups of people from organizing as private military units without the authorization of the state government. These statutes often specifically prohibit such groups from “parading” or “drilling” in public with firearms. New York’s statute is representative: “No body of men other than the organized militia and the armed forces of the United States except such . . . organizations as may be formed under the provisions of this chapter, shall associate themselves together as a military company or other unit or parade in public with firearms in any city or town of this state.” N.Y. Mil. Law § 240.

When self-designated private militia organizations attend public rallies purportedly to keep the peace or protect the rights of protesters or counter-protesters, they likely fit within this type of prohibition, particularly if bearing arms and wearing military-style uniforms. Moreover, as noted above, Texas’s statute barring unauthorized private militias was used to enjoin military-style demonstrations by militia members of the Ku Klux Klan, who sought to intimidate local minority fishermen. See Vietnamese Fishermen’s Ass’n v. Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, 543 F. Supp. 198 (S.D. Tex. 1982). Illinois’s analogous statute was upheld against constitutional challenge in Presser v. Illinois, 116 U.S. 252 (1886), and the Supreme Court recently reiterated that the Second Amendment “does not prevent the prohibition of private paramilitary organizations.” District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570, 621 (2008).

29 STATES PROHIBIT UNAUTHORIZED PRIVATE MILITIAS

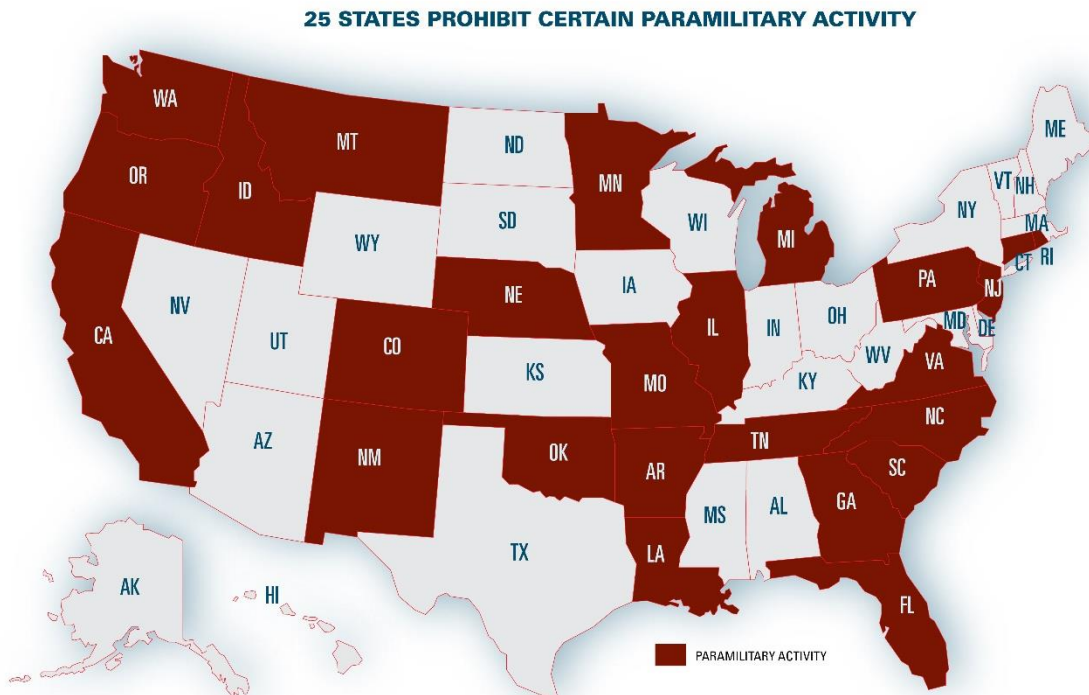

Paramilitary Activity Prohibitions

Twenty-five states have statutes that criminalize certain paramilitary activity. These laws make it illegal for individuals to teach others how to use firearms, explosives, or techniques capable of causing injury or death, or to assemble to train or practice with such firearms, explosives, or techniques, knowing or intending to further a civil disorder. These statutes may create felony or misdemeanor offenses, depending on the jurisdiction. Colorado’s statute is representative:

Any person who teaches or demonstrates to any person the use, application, or making of any firearm, explosive or incendiary device, or technique capable of causing injury or death to any person and who knows that the same will be unlawfully used in furtherance of a civil disorder and any person who assembles with one or more other persons for the purpose of training or practicing with, or being instructed in the use of, any firearm, explosive or incendiary device, or technique capable of causing injury or death to any person with the intent to unlawfully use the same in furtherance of a civil disorder commits a class 5 felony.

Colo. Rev. Stat. § 18-9-120(2).

“Civil disorder” generally is defined as a public disturbance involving acts of violence by two or more persons that causes an immediate danger of, or results in, damage or injury to persons or property. This definition likely would cover conduct similar to that witnessed at the Unite the Right rally.

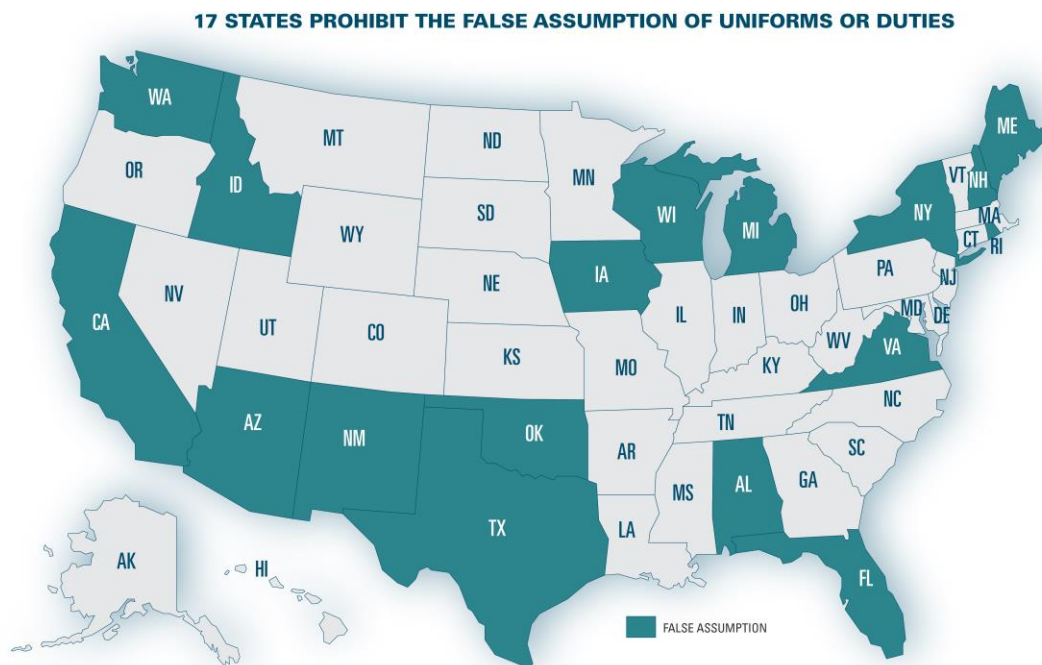

False Assumption Statutes

As noted above, many of the private militias that attended the Unite the Right rally did so as self-appointed peacekeepers and dressed in uniforms strikingly similar to those worn by the National Guard and the U.S. military—thereby confusing many attendees of the rally, including some government officials. This report categorizes as “false assumption” laws two types of statutes that apply to this conduct: statutes that bar the false assumption of the duties of a peace officer and statutes that bar the unauthorized wearing of military uniforms, or close imitations thereof. There are 17 states with applicable statutes.

Virginia’s statute prohibiting the false assumption of the duties of a law enforcement or peace officer is representative of the first sub-group in this category. It provides: “Any person who falsely assumes or exercises the functions, powers, duties, and privileges incident to the office of sheriff, police officer, marshal, or other peace officer, or any local, city, county, state, or federal law-enforcement officer, or who falsely assumes or pretends to be any such officer, is guilty of a Class 1 misdemeanor.” Va. Code Ann. § 18.2-174.

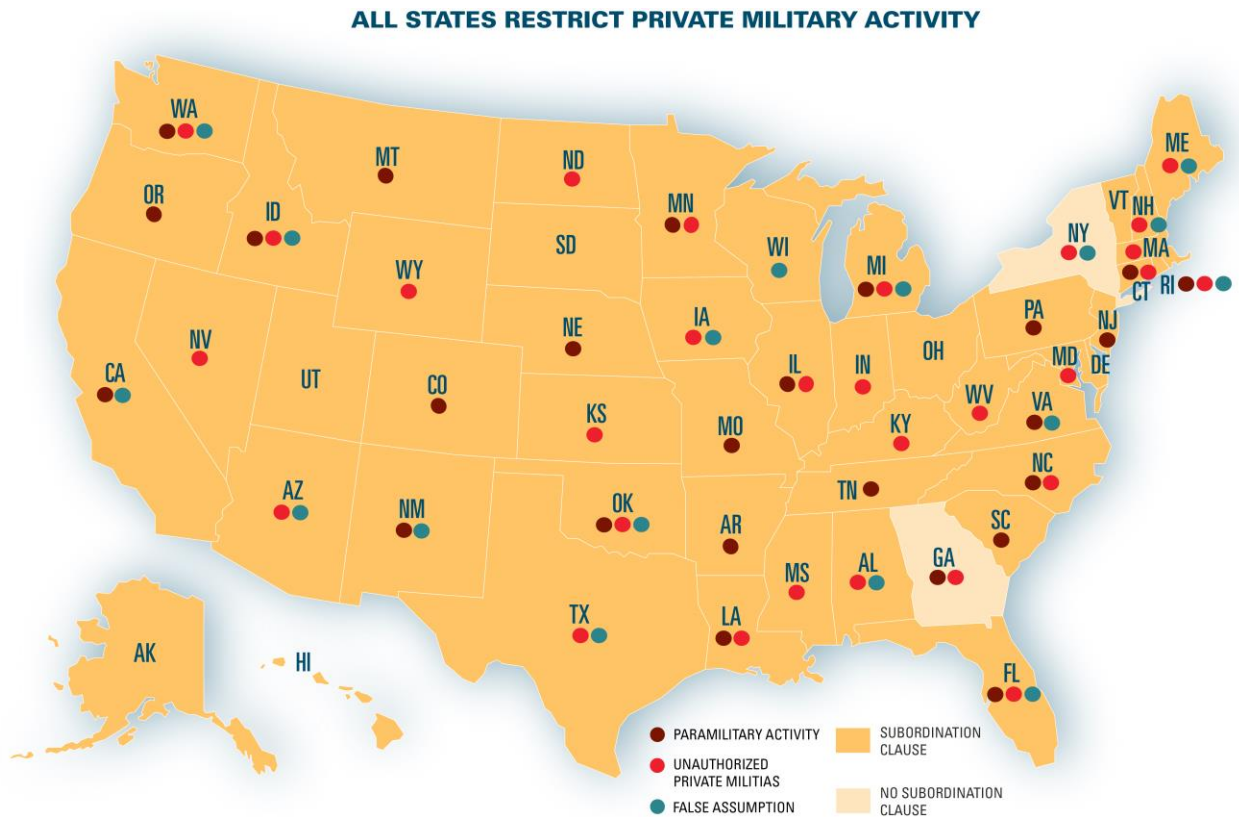

Arizona’s prohibition on the wearing of uniforms is representative of the second subgroup. That statute bars any person from wearing “any part of the uniform of the national guard or the army, navy or air force of the United States, or a uniform so similar as to be easily mistaken therefor, unless the person is a member of the service whose uniform he wears, an inmate of a veterans’ or soldiers’ home, or a member of an organization of the United States veterans.” Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 26-170(A).

It should be noted that many other states have statutes banning the impersonation of law enforcement or members of the military. These provisions have been excluded from this report, however, because certain elements of those offenses (e.g., heightened mens rea requirements) may not be as readily applicable to the conduct likely to occur at future rallies.

Summary

As noted above and demonstrated in the map below, each of the fifty states has at least a constitutional subordination clause or a relevant statutory provision that could be applied to bar paramilitary and private militia conduct at future rallies and other public events. We encourage states and localities across the country to consult these provisions in deciding how best to minimize violence at future public events within the bounds of existing law.
