

Nos. 25-1755, 25-1808

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT

JAMES MARCH,
Plaintiff-Appellant-Cross-Appellee,

v.

TOWN OF GRAND CHUTE, JASON VAN EPEREN, and JEFFREY
INGS
Defendants-Appellees,
and
RONALD WOLFF,
Defendant-Appellee-Cross-Appellant.

On Appeal from a Final Judgment of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin
Case No. 23-C-656, Hon. William C. Griesbach

BRIEF FOR PLAINTIFF-APPELLANT JAMES MARCH

Michael R. Fox
Christopher M. Kloth
Fox & Fox, S.C.

Jeff Scott Olson
Jeff Scott Olson Law Firm, S.C.

Zoe Ades
Isabel Elena Bowman
Veronica Hayes
Student Counsel

Natasha R. Khan
Counsel of Record
Brian Wolfman
Becca Steinberg
GEORGETOWN LAW APPELLATE
COURTS IMMERSION CLINIC
600 New Jersey Ave NW, Suite
312
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 661-6582

Counsel for Plaintiff-Appellant James March

December 5, 2025

Appellate Court No: 25-1755

Short Caption: James March v. Town of Grand Chute et al.

To enable the judges to determine whether recusal is necessary or appropriate, an attorney for a non-governmental party, amicus curiae, intervenor or a private attorney representing a government party, must furnish a disclosure statement providing the following information in compliance with Circuit Rule 26.1 and Fed. R. App. P. 26.1.

The Court prefers that the disclosure statements be filed immediately following docketing; but, the disclosure statement must be filed within 21 days of docketing or upon the filing of a motion, response, petition, or answer in this court, whichever occurs first. Attorneys are required to file an amended statement to reflect any material changes in the required information. The text of the statement must also be included in the front of the table of contents of the party's main brief. Counsel is required to complete the entire statement and to use N/A for any information that is not applicable if this form is used.

PLEASE CHECK HERE IF ANY INFORMATION ON THIS FORM IS NEW OR REVISED AND INDICATE WHICH INFORMATION IS NEW OR REVISED.

(1) The full name of every party that the attorney represents in the case (if the party is a corporation, you must provide the corporate disclosure information required by Fed. R. App. P. 26.1 by completing item #3):

James March

(2) The names of all law firms whose partners or associates have appeared for the party in the case (including proceedings in the district court or before an administrative agency) or are expected to appear for the party in this court:

Fox & Fox S.C.

(3) If the party, amicus or intervenor is a corporation:

i) Identify all its parent corporations, if any; and

ii) list any publicly held company that owns 10% or more of the party's, amicus' or intervenor's stock;

(4) Provide information required by FRAP 26.1(b) – Organizational Victims in Criminal Cases:

(5) Provide Debtor information required by FRAP 26.1 (c) 1 & 2;

Attorney's Signature: s/ Natasha R. Khan Date: 11/20/2025

Attorney's Printed Name: Natasha R. Khan

Please indicate if you are Counsel of Record for the above listed parties pursuant to Circuit Rule 3(d). Yes  No

Address: 600 New Jersey Ave NW Suite 312

Phone Number: 202-662-4071 Fax Number:

E-Mail Address: nrk25@georgetown.edu

Appellate Court No: 25-1755

Short Caption: James March v. Town of Grand Chute et al.

To enable the judges to determine whether recusal is necessary or appropriate, an attorney for a non-governmental party, amicus curiae, intervenor or a private attorney representing a government party, must furnish a disclosure statement providing the following information in compliance with Circuit Rule 26.1 and Fed. R. App. P. 26.1.

The Court prefers that the disclosure statements be filed immediately following docketing; but, the disclosure statement must be filed within 21 days of docketing or upon the filing of a motion, response, petition, or answer in this court, whichever occurs first. Attorneys are required to file an amended statement to reflect any material changes in the required information. The text of the statement must also be included in the front of the table of contents of the party's main brief. Counsel is required to complete the entire statement and to use N/A for any information that is not applicable if this form is used.

PLEASE CHECK HERE IF ANY INFORMATION ON THIS FORM IS NEW OR REVISED AND INDICATE WHICH INFORMATION IS NEW OR REVISED.

(1) The full name of every party that the attorney represents in the case (if the party is a corporation, you must provide the corporate disclosure information required by Fed. R. App. P. 26.1 by completing item #3):
James March

---

(2) The names of all law firms whose partners or associates have appeared for the party in the case (including proceedings in the district court or before an administrative agency) or are expected to appear for the party in this court:
Fox & Fox, S.C.

---

(3) If the party, amicus or intervenor is a corporation:

i) Identify all its parent corporations, if any; and
n/a

ii) list any publicly held company that owns 10% or more of the party's, amicus' or intervenor's stock:
n/a

---

(4) Provide information required by FRAP 26.1(b) – Organizational Victims in Criminal Cases:
n/a

---

(5) Provide Debtor information required by FRAP 26.1 (c) 1 & 2:
n/a

---

Attorney's Signature: Brian Wolfman Date: 11/6/2025

Attorney's Printed Name: Brian Wolfman

Please indicate if you are Counsel of Record for the above listed parties pursuant to Circuit Rule 3(d). Yes  No

Address: 600 New Jersey Ave., NW, Suite 312

Washington DC 20001

Phone Number: 2026616582 Fax Number:

E-Mail Address: wolfmanb@georgetown.edu

---

rev.

APPEARANCE &amp; CIRCUIT RULE 26.1 DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

Appellate Court No: 25-1755

Short Caption: James March v. Town of Grand Chute et al.

To enable the judges to determine whether recusal is necessary or appropriate, an attorney for a non-governmental party, amicus curiae, intervenor or a private attorney representing a government party, must furnish a disclosure statement providing the following information in compliance with Circuit Rule 26.1 and Fed. R. App. P. 26.1.

The Court prefers that the disclosure statements be filed immediately following docketing; but, the disclosure statement must be filed within 21 days of docketing or upon the filing of a motion, response, petition, or answer in this court, whichever occurs first. Attorneys are required to file an amended statement to reflect any material changes in the required information. The text of the statement must also be included in the front of the table of contents of the party's main brief. Counsel is required to complete the entire statement and to use N/A for any information that is not applicable if this form is used.

PLEASE CHECK HERE IF ANY INFORMATION ON THIS FORM IS NEW OR REVISED AND INDICATE WHICH INFORMATION IS NEW OR REVISED.

(1) The full name of every party that the attorney represents in the case (if the party is a corporation, you must provide the corporate disclosure information required by Fed. R. App. P. 26.1 by completing item #3):

James March

(2) The names of all law firms whose partners or associates have appeared for the party in the case (including proceedings in the district court or before an administrative agency) or are expected to appear for the party in this court:

Fox & Fox S.C.; Georgetown Law Appellate Courts Immersion Clinic

(3) If the party, amicus or intervenor is a corporation:

i) Identify all its parent corporations, if any; and

ii) list any publicly held company that owns 10% or more of the party's, amicus' or intervenor's stock:

(4) Provide information required by FRAP 26.1(b) – Organizational Victims in Criminal Cases:

(5) Provide Debtor information required by FRAP 26.1 (c) 1 & 2:

Attorney's Signature: /s/ Becca Steinberg

Date: 12/05/2024

Attorney's Printed Name: Becca Steinberg

Please indicate if you are Counsel of Record for the above listed parties pursuant to Circuit Rule 3(d). Yes  No

Address: 600 New Jersey Ave. NW. Suite 312

Washington, DC 20002

Phone Number: 202-662-9549

Fax Number: _____

E-Mail Address: becca.steinberg@georgetown.edu

APPEARANCE &amp; CIRCUIT RULE 26.1 DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

Appellate Court No: 25-1755

Short Caption: James March v. Town of Grand Chute, et al.

To enable the judges to determine whether recusal is necessary or appropriate, an attorney for a non-governmental party, amicus curiae, intervenor or a private attorney representing a government party, must furnish a disclosure statement providing the following information in compliance with Circuit Rule 26.1 and Fed. R. App. P. 26.1.

The Court prefers that the disclosure statements be filed immediately following docketing; but, the disclosure statement must be filed within 21 days of docketing or upon the filing of a motion, response, petition, or answer in this court, whichever occurs first. Attorneys are required to file an amended statement to reflect any material changes in the required information. The text of the statement must also be included in the front of the table of contents of the party's main brief. Counsel is required to complete the entire statement and to use N/A for any information that is not applicable if this form is used.

PLEASE CHECK HERE IF ANY INFORMATION ON THIS FORM IS NEW OR REVISED AND INDICATE WHICH INFORMATION IS NEW OR REVISED.

Pages: 1

Filed: 05/07/2025

Document: 5

Case: 25-1755

(1) The full name of every party that the attorney represents in the case (if the party is a corporation, you must provide the corporate disclosure information required by Fed. R. App. P. 26.1 by completing item #3):

James March

(2)

The names of all law firms whose partners or associates have appeared for the party in the case (including proceedings in the district court or before an administrative agency) or are expected to appear for the party in this court:

Fox&Fox, S.C.

(3)

If the party, amicus or intervenor is a corporation:

i) Identify all its parent corporations, if any; and

N/A

ii) list any publicly held company that owns 10% or more of the party's, amicus' or intervenor's stock:

N/A

Provide information required by FRAP 26.1(b) – Organizational Victims in Criminal Cases:

N/A

(5)

Provide Debtor information required by FRAP 26.1 (c) 1 & 2:

N/A

Attorney's Signature:

Date: 5/7/25

Attorney's Printed Name: Michael R. Fox

Please indicate if you are Counsel of Record for the above listed parties pursuant to Circuit Rule 3(d). Yes  No

Address: 124 West Broadway, Monona, WI 53716

Phone Number: 608/258-9588

Fax Number: 608/258-9105

E-Mail Address: mfox@foxquick.com

rev. 12/19 AK

APPEARANCE &amp; CIRCUIT RULE 26.1 DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

Appellate Court No: 25-1808Short Caption: March v. Wolff

To enable the judges to determine whether recusal is necessary or appropriate, an attorney for a non-governmental party, amicus curiae, intervenor or a private attorney representing a government party, must furnish a disclosure statement providing the following information in compliance with Circuit Rule 26.1 and Fed. R. App. P. 26.1.

The Court prefers that the disclosure statements be filed immediately following docketing; but, the disclosure statement must be filed within 21 days of docketing or upon the filing of a motion, response, petition, or answer in this court, whichever occurs first. Attorneys are required to file an amended statement to reflect any material changes in the required information. The text of the statement must also be included in the front of the table of contents of the party's main brief. Counsel is required to complete the entire statement and to use N/A for any information that is not applicable if this form is used.

PLEASE CHECK HERE IF ANY INFORMATION ON THIS FORM IS NEW OR REVISED AND INDICATE WHICH INFORMATION IS NEW OR REVISED.

(1) The full name of every party that the attorney represents in the case (if the party is a corporation, you must provide the corporate disclosure information required by Fed. R. App. P. 26.1 by completing item #3):

James March

(2) The names of all law firms whose partners or associates have appeared for the party in the case (including proceedings in the district court or before an administrative agency) or are expected to appear for the party in this court:

Fox & Fox, S. C.

The Jeff Scott Olson Law Firm, S. C.

(3) If the party, amicus or intervenor is a corporation:

i) Identify all its parent corporations, if any; and

James March is not a corporation.

ii) list any publicly held company that owns 10% or more of the party's, amicus' or intervenor's stock:

James March is not a corporation.

(4) Provide information required by FRAP 26.1(b) – Organizational Victims in Criminal Cases:

Not applicable.

(5) Provide Debtor information required by FRAP 26.1 (c) 1 & 2:

Not applicable.

Attorney's Signature: /s/ Jeff Scott Olson Date: May 27, 2025

Attorney's Printed Name: Jeff Scott Olson

Please indicate if you are Counsel of Record for the above listed parties pursuant to Circuit Rule 3(d). Yes  No

Address: The Jeff Scott Olson Law Firm, S. C.

1025 Quinn Drive, Suite 500; Waunakee, WI 53597-2502

Phone Number: 608 283 6001 Fax Number: 608 283 0945

E-Mail Address: jsolson@scofflaw.com

APPEARANCE &amp; CIRCUIT RULE 26.1 DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

Appellate Court No: 25-1755Short Caption: James March v. Town of Grand Chute, Ronald Wolff, Jeffrey Ings ,and Jason Van Eperen

To enable the judges to determine whether recusal is necessary or appropriate, an attorney for a non-governmental party, amicus curiae, intervenor or a private attorney representing a government party, must furnish a disclosure statement providing the following information in compliance with Circuit Rule 26.1 and Fed. R. App. P. 26.1.

The Court prefers that the disclosure statements be filed immediately following docketing; but, the disclosure statement must be filed within 21 days of docketing or upon the filing of a motion, response, petition, or answer in this court, whichever occurs first. Attorneys are required to file an amended statement to reflect any material changes in the required information. The text of the statement must also be included in the front of the table of contents of the party's main brief. Counsel is required to complete the entire statement and to use N/A for any information that is not applicable if this form is used.

PLEASE CHECK HERE IF ANY INFORMATION ON THIS FORM IS NEW OR REVISED AND INDICATE WHICH INFORMATION IS NEW OR REVISED.

(1) The full name of every party that the attorney represents in the case (if the party is a corporation, you must provide the corporate disclosure information required by Fed. R. App. P. 26.1 by completing item #3):

James March

(2) The names of all law firms whose partners or associates have appeared for the party in the case (including proceedings in the district court or before an administrative agency) or are expected to appear for the party in this court:

Fox & Fox, S.C.

(3) If the party, amicus or intervenor is a corporation:

i) Identify all its parent corporations, if any; and

N/A

ii) list any publicly held company that owns 10% or more of the party's, amicus' or intervenor's stock:

N/A

(4) Provide information required by FRAP 26.1(b) – Organizational Victims in Criminal Cases:

N/A

(5) Provide Debtor information required by FRAP 26.1 (c) 1 & 2:

N/A

Attorney's Signature: s/ Christopher Kloth Date: May 5, 2025

Attorney's Printed Name: Christopher M. Kloth

Please indicate if you are Counsel of Record for the above listed parties pursuant to Circuit Rule 3(d). Yes  No

Address: 124 W. Broadway

Monona, WI 53716

Phone Number: 608-258-9588 Fax Number: 608-258-9105

E-Mail Address: ckloth@foxquick.com

APPEARANCE &amp; CIRCUIT RULE 26.1 DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

Appellate Court No: 25-1808Short Caption: James March v. Ronald Wolff, Jr.

To enable the judges to determine whether recusal is necessary or appropriate, an attorney for a non-governmental party, amicus curiae, intervenor or a private attorney representing a government party, must furnish a disclosure statement providing the following information in compliance with Circuit Rule 26.1 and Fed. R. App. P. 26.1.

The Court prefers that the disclosure statements be filed immediately following docketing; but, the disclosure statement must be filed within 21 days of docketing or upon the filing of a motion, response, petition, or answer in this court, whichever occurs first. Attorneys are required to file an amended statement to reflect any material changes in the required information. The text of the statement must also be included in the front of the table of contents of the party's main brief. Counsel is required to complete the entire statement and to use N/A for any information that is not applicable if this form is used.

PLEASE CHECK HERE IF ANY INFORMATION ON THIS FORM IS NEW OR REVISED AND INDICATE WHICH INFORMATION IS NEW OR REVISED.

(1) The full name of every party that the attorney represents in the case (if the party is a corporation, you must provide the corporate disclosure information required by Fed. R. App. P. 26.1 by completing item #3):

James March on the Counterclaim only

(2) The names of all law firms whose partners or associates have appeared for the party in the case (including proceedings in the district court or before an administrative agency) or are expected to appear for the party in this court:

Davczyk & Varline, LLC

(3) If the party, amicus or intervenor is a corporation:

i) Identify all its parent corporations, if any; and

N/A

ii) list any publicly held company that owns 10% or more of the party's, amicus' or intervenor's stock:

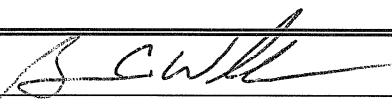

N/A

(4) Provide information required by FRAP 26.1(b) – Organizational Victims in Criminal Cases:

N/A

(5) Provide Debtor information required by FRAP 26.1 (c) 1 & 2:

N/A

Attorney's Signature:

Date: 05/30/2025

Attorney's Printed Name: Brian C. Williams

Please indicate if you are Counsel of Record for the above listed parties pursuant to Circuit Rule 3(d). Yes  No

Address: Davczyk & Varline, LLC, 1400 Merrill Avenue, Wausau, WI 54401

Phone Number: (715) 675-7777

Fax Number: (715) 675-8888

E-Mail Address: bwilliams@dvlawoffice.com

Table of Contents

	Page(s)
Table of Authorities.....	iv
Introduction.....	1
Jurisdictional Statement.....	2
Issues Presented.....	3
Statement of the Case .....	3
I.    Factual background.....	3
A.    The Town of Grand Chute and its major players .....	3
B.    Wolff fails to divest from Lake Shore Cleaners. ....	4
C.    The Wisconsin Department of Justice investigates Wolff.....	5
D.    March and his colleagues are subjected to increased scrutiny. ....	7
E.    March is fired.....	8
II.    Procedural background .....	9
Summary of Argument.....	11
Standard of Review .....	13
Argument.....	14
I.    The district court erred in applying the Elrod-Branti framework to March's First Amendment claim.....	14
A.    March's speech to Agent Yerges does not implicate Elrod-Branti . .....	14
B.    Even if the Elrod-Branti exception could apply to speech about a supervisor's abuse of office, the district court improperly used after-acquired evidence to conclude that March's speech met the exception.....	21
C.    Even if Elrod-Branti did apply, a reasonable jury could find that March's speech was not politically motivated. ....	22
II.    March's responses to Agent Yerges's questions are protected by the First Amendment under Pickering . .....	26

A. March spoke as a citizen outside the scope of his official duties during his interviews with Agent Yerges. ....	27
B. March's speech was on a matter of public concern. ....	30
C. The public's interest in rooting out government corruption outweighs the Town's asserted interest in efficient provision of government services. ....	31
III. A reasonable jury could find that March's protected speech motivated Defendants to terminate him.....	33
IV. Defendants are not entitled to qualified immunity.....	36
Conclusion .....	40
Certificate of Compliance.....
Attached Appendix
Certificate of Compliance with Circuit Rule 30.....
Opinion and Order, Apr. 8, 2025, ECF 123.....
Judgment, Apr. 9, 2025, ECF 124 .....

Table of Authorities

Cases	Page(s)
Ashcroft v. al-Kidd , 563 U.S. 731 (2011).....	36, 37
Bonds v. Milwaukee Cnty. , 207 F.3d 969 (7th Cir. 2000).....	12, 14, 15, 16, 18, 19, 38
Branti v. Finkel , 445 U.S. 507 (1980).....	14, 14-15
Chi. Reg'l Council of Carpenters Pension Fund v. Schal Bovis, Inc. , 826 F.3d 397 (7th Cir. 2016).....	13
Chrzanowski v. Bianchi , 725 F.3d 734 (7th Cir. 2013).....	27, 28
Connick v. Myers , 461 U.S. 138 (1983).....	31, 32, 33
Cuff v. Trans States Holdings , 768 F.3d 605 (7th Cir. 2014).....	22
Elrod v. Burns , 427 U.S. 347 (1979).....	14, 15, 19
Freitag v. Ayers , 468 F.3d 528 (9th Cir. 2006).....	30
Garcetti v. Ceballos , 547 U.S. 410 (2006).....	20, 26, 27, 28, 32
Greer v. Amesqua , 212 F.3d 358 (7th Cir. 2000).....	30
Hagan v. Quinn , 867 F.3d 816 (7th Cir. 2017).....	14, 18, 19

Heffernan v. City of Paterson , 578 U.S. 266 (2016).....	14
Houskins v. Sheahan , 549 F.3d 480 (7th Cir. 2008).....	29
Howell v. Town of Ball , 827 F.3d 515 (5th Cir. 2016).....	28
Hudson v. Washington Cnty. , 1993 WL 100093 (6th Cir. Apr. 5, 1993) .....	32-33
Johnson v. City of Shelby , 574 U.S. 10 (2014).....	37
Kidwell v. Eisenhauer , 679 F.3d 957 (7th Cir. 2012).....	33, 34
Klunk v. Cnty. of St. Joseph , 170 F.3d 772 (7th Cir. 1999).....	33
Kristofek v. Vill. of Orland Hills , 832 F.3d 785 (7th Cir. 2016).....	28, 39
Lane v. Franks , 573 U.S. 228 (2014).....	11, 17, 20, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 38
Marohnic v. Walker , 800 F.2d 613 (6th Cir. 1986).....	32
Marshall v. Porter Cnty. Plan Comm'n , 32 F.3d 1215 (7th Cir. 1994).....	11, 15, 16, 17, 37, 38
Matrisciano v. Randle , 569 F.3d 723 (7th Cir. 2009).....	16
McGreal v. Vill. of Orland Park , 850 F.3d 308 (7th Cir. 2017).....	34
McKennon v. Nash. Banner Publ'g Co. , 513 U.S. 352 (1995).....	21, 22

Noon v. City of Platte Woods , 94 F.4th 759 (8th Cir. 2024) .....	20-21
Owen v. City of Independence , 445 U.S. 622 (1980).....	37
Peirick v. Indiana Univ.-Purdue Univ. Indianapolis Athletics Dep't , 510 F.3d 681 (7th Cir. 2007).....	35
Pickering v. Board of Educ. , 391 U.S. 563 (1968).....	10, 14, 26, 30
Porter v. Califano , 592 F.2d 770 (5th Cir. 1979).....	21
Reichle v. Howards , 566 U.S. 658 (2012).....	37
Roupe v. Bay Cnty. , 268 F. Supp. 2d 825 (E.D. Mich. 2003).....	20
Smith v. Dunn , 368 F.3d 705 (7th Cir. 2004).....	13
Spieglia v. Hull , 371 F.3d 928 (7th Cir. 2004).....	39
State v. Caldwell , 454 N.W.2d 13 (Wis. Ct. App. 1990).....	29
Sweet v. Town of Bargersville , 18 F.4th 273 (7th Cir. 2021) .....	27
United States v. Alvarez , 567 U.S. 709 (2012).....	31
Valentino v. Vill. of S. Chi. Heights , 575 F.3d 664 (7th Cir. 2009).....	35, 39

Vargas-Harrison v. Racine Unified Sch. Dist. , 272 F.3d 964 (7th Cir. 2001).....	18
Wainscott v. Henry , 315 F.3d 844 (7th Cir. 2003).....	32
Wilbur v. Mahan , 3 F.3d 214 (7th Cir. 1993).....	18
Statutes
28 U.S.C. § 1291 .....	2
28 U.S.C. § 1331 .....	2
Wis. Stat. § 946.13(1)(a) .....	4
Wis. Stat. § 946.41(1) .....	29
Other Authorities
Kristine Artello &amp; Jay S. Albanese, Rising to the Surface: The Detection of Public Corruption , 21 Criminology, Crim. Just., L. & Soc'y., Apr. 2020 .....	29-30
Special Assessment Process and Notification , Grand Chute, https://www.grandchutewi.gov/departments/finance/general/special-assessment-process-and-notification (last accessed Dec. 5, 2025) .....	4

Introduction

James March dedicated fifteen years to the Town of Grand Chute, serving as the Town Administrator across several administrations. In late 2021, the Wisconsin Department of Justice (DOJ) sought information from March as part of an investigation into Town Supervisor Ronald Wolff's alleged corruption. Because March truthfully answered the DOJ investigator's questions, the Town's Board of Supervisors fired him.

March contends that the Town and several of its officials violated his First Amendment rights when they fired him for responding to an investigator's questions about purported public corruption. The district court granted summary judgment to Defendants, concluding that the First Amendment does not protect March's speech. If allowed to stand, this holding would force government employees to choose between honestly answering law-enforcement inquiries and losing their jobs or staying silent and allowing corruption to persist. That cannot be right.

The district court's error resulted from improperly conflating two distinct First Amendment doctrines: the Pickering balancing framework used to assess whether speech by public employees is protected and the Elrod-Branti exception, which allows employers to terminate subordinate policymakers for speech critical of their governmental employer's politics or policies. Contrary to the district court's holding, the

Elrod-Branti exception does not apply here because March's speech concerned public corruption, not his employer's politics or policy positions.

Applying Pickering balancing, as the district court should have, it is clearly established that March's statements concerning Wolff's corruption fell outside the scope of his employment and qualified as citizen speech on a matter of public concern. And the government's asserted interest in workplace efficiency is far outweighed by March's, and the public's, interest in rooting out municipal corruption. This Court should reverse and remand for trial because a genuine dispute of material fact exists as to whether March's protected disclosures motivated his termination.

Jurisdictional Statement

The district court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. Dist. Ct. Op., ECF 123, at 1. The district court's order granting summary judgment to Defendants, ECF 123, entered on April 8, 2025, and its separate judgment, ECF 124, entered on April 9, 2025, disposed of all claims of all parties. Plaintiff-Appellant March timely filed a notice of appeal on May 1, 2025. App. 385-86. This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

Issues Presented

- I. Whether March's disclosures to a Wisconsin DOJ investigator about Wolff's alleged corruption were protected under the First Amendment.
- II. Whether Defendants' decision to terminate March was motivated by his protected disclosures.
- III. Whether the individual Defendants violated March's clearly established First Amendment rights.

Statement of the Case

I. Factual background

A. The Town of Grand Chute and its major players

Plaintiff-Appellant James March was hired as the Town Administrator for Grand Chute, Wisconsin in 2008. App. 256. As the Town's highest-ranking unelected official, March oversaw and coordinated the Town government's operations and assisted in implementing its policies. App. 32, 52; Dist. Ct. Op., ECF 123, at 2.

March's duties required him to work with the five-member Board of Supervisors running the Town government. App. 52, 194. From April 2021 to April 2023, the members of the Board of Supervisors were Bradley Gehring, Walter Nocito, and Defendants-Appellees Jeffrey Ings, Ronald Wolff, and Jason Van Eperen. App. 154, 361, 282, 193, 70; ECF 123, at 3, 9. Four members of the Board—Wolff, Van Eperen, Ings, and Nocito—were political allies. App. 73, 177, 215, 242, 362. Wolff, Van Eperen, and Ings campaigned on eliminating special assessments—extra charges imposed by the Town for benefits provided to property owners. App. 33-34 (Wolff's allegations), 73, 190-91, 282; see Special Assessment Process and Notification, Grand Chute.<sup>1</sup> Wolff had a personal stake in opposing these charges: He was subject to assessments himself. App. 241, 304. Gehring, whose tenure began before the other Supervisors', was viewed as the main opposition to these reforms. App. 73.

B. Wolff fails to divest from Lake Shore Cleaners.

Along with serving on the Board, Wolff owned and operated Lake Shore Cleaners, a local landscaping company. App. 70. Lake Shore Cleaners also employed Wolff's fellow supervisor Ings and frequently subcontracted with the Town. App. 71, 282. Under Wisconsin law, Wolff could not simultaneously serve on the Town Board and “negotiate, bid for, or enter into” any contracts in which he had a financial interest. Wis. Stat. § 946.13(1)(a). After he was elected, Wolff assured others, including March, that he had divested from Lake Shore Cleaners. App. 92, 104, 119, 121.

But Wolff had not divested. App. 93. Instead, shortly after he was elected in spring 2021, Wolff submitted a quote for a landscaping subcontract on behalf of Lake Shore Cleaners to undertake plantings around the ponds at a local sports complex owned by the Town—the Champion Pond contract. App. 71, 293. And even after Wolff claimed to have divested, he answered a phone call from March as “Lake Shore Cleaners,” raising March’s suspicions that Wolff had not divested at all. App. 104. When March followed up, Wolff insisted that he was still in the process of divesting. App. 104. But Wolff resented March’s concerns, at one point becoming “angry” and “storm[ing] out of [March’s] office.” App. 94. Later, in June, after consulting with counsel for the Town, the Board approved Lake Shore Cleaners’ quote for work on the Champion Pond Project. App. 37, 107. Wolff and Ings abstained. App. 107. By the end of the year, Lake Shore Cleaners completed the project and received payment in full from the Town. App. 72, 82-83.

---

<sup>1</sup> <https://www.grandchutewi.gov/departments/finance/general/special-assessment-process-and-notification> (last accessed Dec. 5, 2025).

C. The Wisconsin Department of Justice investigates Wolff.

In August 2021, Gehring filed a complaint with the Town Clerk, alleging that Wolff was not a resident of Grand Chute and was therefore ineligible to serve on Grand Chute’s Town Board. App. 296-300, 329. After the Town Clerk dismissed Gehring’s complaint, App. 118, Gehring discussed this concern with the Public Integrity Unit of the Wisconsin DOJ, a state law-enforcement agency. App. 155. In October, he met with Special Agent Jay Yerges of DOJ’s Division of Criminal Investigation. At that meeting, Gehring raised concerns about Wolff’s failure to divest from Lake Shore Cleaners prior to bidding for the Champion Pond contract and allegedly illegal discussions between Wolff and other supervisors about Town business conducted outside official Board meetings. App. 286-94.

As part of his investigation into this potential criminal misconduct by Wolff and other elected officials, Agent Yerges contacted March, who, as indicated, was the Town Administrator. App. 304. Taking seriously his obligation as a citizen to assist state law enforcement, App. 146, March privately relayed several concerns to Yerges, including that he had heard that Wolff lived in Nichols, Wisconsin, not in Grand Chute, App. 305, and that Wolff had bid on the Champion Pond contract while serving as a Town Supervisor, App. 308. March noted, however, that a statutory exemption related to erosion control may have authorized Lake Shore Cleaners' participation in the project despite Wolff's conflict of interest. App. 308.

In February 2022, Agent Yerges interviewed March again. App. 324-25. March told Yerges about recent (and potentially unethical) actions taken by Ings and Van Eperen, including their efforts to amend ordinances governing the Town's water and sewer extensions so that they and their families could benefit. App. 324. March also reported that the Town Attorney, who had been present at meetings about the extensions, attempted to intervene by reminding Ings and Van Eperen about their legal obligation to avoid conflicts of interest. App. 325. The Town Attorney "became so upset" during one of these meetings that he threatened to resign, a suggestion that was met by “certain board members” with approval. App. 325.

Yerges, this time accompanied by an assistant attorney general, met with March for the last time in early 2023. App. 87. At this meeting, March explained that “sometime after” Lake Shore Cleaners completed its work on the Champion Pond Project, the Town’s Public Works Director raised concerns with March about the legality of Lake Shore Cleaners performing the work while Wolff was “a sitting town board supervisor.” App. 87.

D. March and his colleagues are subjected to increased scrutiny.

In March 2022, as part of its ongoing investigation, DOJ executed a search warrant on Wolff’s properties. App. 109. Furious, Wolff resolved to find the source of the information that DOJ used to obtain the warrant. App. 109-10, 218. Wolff emailed March and the Town Clerk saying that “if the Town would not do an investigation” into the search warrant, “others would.” App. 218. Supporting his Lake Shore Cleaners’ employer, Ings also asked the Town Attorney whether the Town would fund an inquiry into the DOJ investigation. App. 218. The Town Attorney refused, telling Ings that any such effort would need to be funded individually by Board members. App. 218, 366.

Shortly thereafter, Ings asked March whether he had spoken to DOJ. App. 260. March confirmed that he and other Town employees had been interviewed by Yerges about Wolff's alleged malfeasance. App. 260. In response to this cooperation with law enforcement, Ings, Van Eperen, and Wolff expressed disapproval, repeatedly cornering March individually and in pairs to ask what March knew about the DOJ investigation. App. 139. Wolff accused March of "ruin[ing]" his business, warning him that Wolff and others had a "plan" for March and that "[t]he games [were] over." App. 140-41.

Ings, Nocito, Wolff, and Van Eperen also delivered a letter to the FBI, accusing March and other Town employees of inappropriate conduct leading to enforcement officials coming "after Ron Wolff for totally ridiculous reasons." App. 194. Ings also wrote a letter to Wisconsin Attorney General Josh Kaul requesting information about the DOJ investigation. App. 226-27.

E. March is fired.

In June 2022, just a few months after discovering March had cooperated with DOJ, Wolff, Van Eperen, and Ings questioned Town HR Director Susan Brinkman about what they would need to do to fire March. App. 352-53. Brinkman confirmed that the Board had the power to terminate March by a supermajority vote but warned that "there may be a retaliation claim" if the Board fired March "because of the [DOJ] investigation." App. 353.

In late 2022, the Board issued goals to March for 2023, as they had done annually prior to 2021. App. 219. In April 2023, Van Eperen told the rest of the Board during a meeting that March had met all his goals. App. 220, 328. Around the same time, however, Van Eperen suggested that March's compensation was too high—even though the Board itself had approved March's salary. App. 169, 231. This complaint indicated to Gehring that the other supervisors were searching for disingenuous reasons to terminate March. App. 171.

During closed-session Board meetings in April 2023, Gehring pushed back on Defendants' arguments for firing March. App. 231-32. When the other supervisors complained about March's supposed failure to disclose his salary, Gehring pointed out that March's salary information had always been available to them. App. 169.

But Gehring could not prevent Defendants from carrying out their plan. In early May 2023, the Board voted to terminate March. App. 259. Wolff, Ings and Van Eperen—joined by Elizabeth English, a newly elected supervisor who had defeated Nocito in the spring 2023 election, App. 174, 182,—voted in favor of termination. App. 182. English, however, later changed her mind and sought to rehire March. App. 176.

II. Procedural background

After his firing, March sued the Town of Grand Chute, Ronald Wolff, Jason Van Eperen, and Jeffrey Ings (collectively, Defendants) in the Eastern District of Wisconsin. App. 18-24. As relevant here, March alleged that Defendants violated his First Amendment rights by unlawfully terminating him in retaliation for speaking to a DOJ investigator. App. 23. Defendant Wolff brought First Amendment retaliation and Fourteenth Amendment class-of-one equal-protection counterclaims on the theory that March had subjected him to investigation “out of a spiteful effort to ‘get’ Ron Wolff.” App. 49-51; Dist. Ct. Op., ECF 123, at 31-32. March moved for summary judgment on Wolff’s counterclaims, Pl.’s Mot. for Summ. J., ECF 81, and Defendants cross-moved on March’s claims, Defs.’ Mot. for Summ. J., ECF 83.<sup>2</sup>

The district court granted both motions for summary judgment, rejecting all claims. ECF 123, at 1. As for Wolff’s claims, the court reasoned that “March was not legally responsible for the [DOJ] investigation or resulting criminal charges” and that the class-of-one theory does not apply in the public-employment context. ECF 123, at 35, 37-38.

On March’s First Amendment claim, the district court conflated the balancing test set forth in Pickering v. Board of Education, 391 U.S. 563 (1968), which applies to most public-employee speech claims, with the <sup>2</sup> March also alleged that Defendants violated his Fourteenth Amendment due-process rights when they terminated him. App. 23. The district court granted summary judgment to Defendants on that claim, Dist. Ct. Op., ECF 123, at 27-31, and it is not pursued in this appeal.

---

Elrod-Branti line of cases permitting employers to fire policymakers for their political associations. ECF 123, at 15-23; see Marshall v. Porter Cnty. Plan Comm'n, 32 F.3d 1215, 1220 (7th Cir. 1994) (explaining the Elrod-Branti exception). In doing so, the district court declined to apply Lane v. Franks, 573 U.S. 228 (2014), in which the Supreme Court held that, under Pickering, the First Amendment protects government employees' speech reporting public corruption. ECF 123, at 20-22.

The court instead relied on March's purported failure to stop the Champion Pond contract and text messages between March and Gehring acquired in discovery to conclude that March cooperated with DOJ investigators to undermine a Wolff-led faction of the Board. ECF 123, at 22. Based on those facts, the court maintained, March could be terminated under the Elrod-Branti exception. Id. at 22-23. And even if March had a valid First Amendment claim, the court concluded that the individual Defendants would be entitled to qualified immunity. Id. at 25-26. In the court's view, March did not have a clearly established First Amendment right to assist law enforcement with a criminal investigation without suffering retaliation. Id.

Summary of Argument

I.A. The district court erred when it applied the Elrod-Branti exception to March's First Amendment claim. March's speech does not fall under Elrod-Branti because it did not concern his "political or policy viewpoints.” Bonds v. Milwaukee Cnty., 207 F.3d 969, 979 (7th Cir. 2000). Construing this exception to strip protection from employee responses to law-enforcement investigations into corruption would not serve the exception’s purpose, which is to prevent political disloyalty, not to insulate public graft from criminal enforcement.

B. Even if the Elrod-Branti exception could apply to information about corruption provided to law enforcement, the district court improperly relied on text messages acquired during discovery to conclude that Defendants fired March because he was politically opposed to them. Because Defendants did not learn about these messages until discovery, any political affiliation reflected in them could not have been the basis for their earlier decision to fire March and therefore cannot support application of Elrod-Branti.

C. Even if a jury could properly consider that after-acquired evidence, it could still reasonably find that March did not speak to Agent Yerges for political reasons, taking March’s conduct outside of Elrod-Branti. Contrary to the district court’s finding, the record—including March’s text messages to Gehring and his inability to stop the Champion Pond contract—does not establish as matter of law that March’s speech was politically motivated.

II. Under the Pickering framework, March’s speech is protected. First, March was speaking as a citizen during his interviews with Yerges. His official duties—both on paper and in practice—did not include responding to law-enforcement inquiries. Second, his speech concerned public corruption, which the Supreme Court has recognized as a quintessential matter of public concern. Third, March's and the public's interest in combating public corruption far outweighs Defendants' asserted interest in efficient and effective governance that would supposedly be achieved by muzzling March.

III. March met his burden of showing that a reasonable jury could find his termination was motivated by retaliatory intent. The evidence establishes that retaliation was a motivating factor for the discharge and that Defendants' asserted non-retaliatory justifications are pretextual.

IV. The district court erred in concluding, alternatively, that the individual Defendants are entitled to qualified immunity. This Court has clearly established that speech about public corruption is protected by the First Amendment, regardless of whether the speaker was a policymaker. Besides, Defendant Town of Grand Chute is liable for firing March because a municipality is never entitled to qualified immunity.

Standard of Review

The district court's grant of summary judgment on March's First Amendment retaliation claim is reviewed de novo. Smith v. Dunn, 368 F.3d 705, 708 (7th Cir. 2004). This Court must "construe all inferences" in favor of March, the non-moving party. Chi. Reg'l Council of Carpenters Pension Fund v. Schal Bovis, Inc., 826 F.3d 397, 403 (7th Cir. 2016).

Argument

I. The district court erred in applying the Elrod-Branti framework to March's First Amendment claim.

A. March's speech to Agent Yerges does not implicate Elrod-Branti.

Before explaining why the district court erred in upholding March's firing, we first lay out the basic legal framework. First Amendment claims brought by government employees are typically analyzed under the balancing test established in Pickering v. Board of Education, 391 U.S. 563 (1968). See Bonds v. Milwaukee Cnty., 207 F.3d 969, 977 (7th Cir. 2000); Hagan v. Quinn, 867 F.3d 816, 819-20 (7th Cir. 2017). Under Pickering, when an employee speaks as a citizen on a matter of public concern, courts must "weigh the employer's interest in government efficiency and effectiveness" against "the public employee's free speech interests." Bonds, 207 F.3d at 977.

A different framework governs policymaking employees who are terminated by government employers because of their political affiliations. See generally Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347 (1979); Branti v. Finkel, 445 U.S. 507 (1980). Public employees are generally protected by the First Amendment from being fired because of their political speech. See Heffernan v. City of Paterson, 578 U.S. 266, 268 (2016). But when an employee holds a "policymaking" position, "political affiliation is a legitimate factor to be considered" in their termination. Branti, 445 U.S.

at 518 (discussing Elrod, 427 U.S. at 367). Government officials do not violate the First Amendment when they discharge a policymaking employee for speech that concerns the employee’s “politics or substantive policy viewpoints.” Bonds, 207 F.3d at 979. That speech is unprotected because the government employer “has a heightened need for trust and confidence” that its policymaking subordinates are “guided by the same political compass and will exercise their discretion in a manner consistent with their shared political agenda.” Id. at 977. Applying the Elrod-Branti exception thus “obviates Pickering balancing.” Id.

The district court assumed that March’s role as a policymaker was sufficient to render his speech unprotected. That’s wrong. Though March is likely a “policymaker,” that fact alone does not mean that Elrod-Branti applies. Marshall v. Porter Cnty. Plan Comm’n, 32 F.3d 1215, 1221 (7th Cir. 1994). Rather, the exception applies only when “the plaintiff’s politics are implicated in the discharge.” Id.

1. March’s speech does not fall under the Elrod-Branti exception because March did not criticize his employer’s politics or policies. Elrod-Branti does “not restrict the rights of policymakers to such an extent that they have no First Amendment rights, regardless of the content of their speech.” Marshall, 32 F.3d at 1221. March’s speech to Agent Yerges concerning Wolff’s alleged corruption does not “implicate” his “politics or substantive policy viewpoints,” so Elrod-Branti does not apply. Bonds, 207 F.3d at 979; see also Matrisciano v. Randle, 569 F.3d 723, 732 (7th Cir. 2009).

This case is analogous to Marshall v. Porter County Plan Commission, in which this Court affirmed a jury's finding that firing the executive secretary of a planning commission for raising concerns about a building inspector's fraudulent reimbursement practices violated the First Amendment. 32 F.3d at 1217, 1219, 1221-22. Like March, Marshall held substantive responsibilities including reviewing rezoning and use-variance plans, and the Seventh Circuit assumed she was a "policymaker." Id. at 1221. But her politics were not implicated in the discharge because she "criticiz[ed] her employer's abuse of office," not his "political or policy viewpoints." Bonds, 207 F.3d at 979 (discussing Marshall). Thus, Elrod-Branti did not apply. Marshall, 32 F.3d at 1221.

Here too, March identified Wolff's potential abuses by telling Agent Yerges that Wolff may not have resided in Grand Chute and that the Champion Pond contract could present a conflict of interest. App. 305, 308. March noted, as well, that Wolff failed to divest from Lake Shore Cleaners. App. 308. But he did not "contradict[]" or "criticize[]" the Board's or Wolff's "own positions." Bonds, 207 F.3d at 978. He never, for instance, expressed opposition to the Board's anti-special-assessment agenda. See App. 87-88, 304-10, 317-20, 324-25. Instead, he shared concerns that apply to all supervisors, regardless of political affiliation.

Additional context confirms that March’s speech in no way “reflect[ed] his ... political associations,” as required for Elrod-Branti to apply. Marshall, 32 F.3d at 1221. March was not running for office, nor did he openly support a candidate opposed to Wolff or to the rest of the Board. See id. Defendants have offered no evidence that March even belonged to a different political party from Wolff. Rather, March was an unelected civil servant who served across administrations, see App. 52, 256, and provided basic factual information to a law-enforcement representative.

Lane v. Franks, 573 U.S. 228 (2014), the Supreme Court case involving circumstances most analogous to those here, confirms the inapplicability of Elrod-Branti. There, a community college’s youth outreach program director was terminated for testifying about another employee’s fraudulent conduct. See id. at 231-33. Lane was likely a policymaker based on his “program director” title. See id. at 231-36; see also Dist. Ct. Op., ECF 123, at 21 (district court acknowledging as much). Though Lane did not criticize a direct superior, his supervisors allegedly terminated him for reporting corruption—which could be perceived as disloyalty. Id. at 234. But the Supreme Court did not even consider applying Elrod-Branti, underscoring that the exception simply does not encompass speech reporting public corruption.

Nor does March’s speech look anything like the situations where this Court has applied the exception, which include campaigning against a supervisor or criticizing a supervisor’s policy proposals in a public forum.

See, e.g., Wilbur v. Mahan, 3 F.3d 214, 215-16 (7th Cir. 1993); Vargas-Harrison v. Racine Unified Sch. Dist., 272 F.3d 964, 974 (7th Cir. 2001); Hagan, 867 F.3d at 826. In Wilbur, for example, the Elrod-Branti exception applied when a deputy sheriff ran for office against his supervisor. 3 F.3d at 217-19. And in Vargas-Harrison, Elrod-Branti rendered unprotected a school principal’s public criticism of the school district’s new policy proposal. 272 F.3d at 974. March’s conversation with DOJ investigators about potential corruption is far afield from the overtly political/policy-focused speech at issue in these cases.

Wolff suggested below that March had a political motive for cooperating with Agent Yerges’s investigation: He supported an opposing faction on the Board led by Gehring. Def. Wolff’s Br. in Supp. of Am. Mot. for Partial Summ. J., ECF 43, at 4-5. But Defendants did not have access to the text messages purporting to establish that motive or otherwise know of them until after they terminated March, so that evidence does not permit them to escape liability. See infra at 21-22 (discussing why this after-acquired evidence cannot, as a matter of law, defeat March’s First Amendment claim).

Moreover, Defendants’ focus on the motivation behind March’s speech, rather than its content, is misplaced. Even if an employee’s speech is motivated in part by self-interest, Elrod-Branti does not apply unless the speech also “implicate[s] the employee’s politics or substantive policy viewpoints,” Bonds, 207 F.3d at 979. And here, March never identified, let alone disagreed with, a single “substantive policy viewpoint” of Wolff’s during his interview with Agent Yerges. Id. Rather, March noted his concerns with (1) Wolff’s residency, a requirement that applies to all supervisors regardless of political affiliation; and (2) Wolff’s possible conflicts of interest, which likewise must be avoided by all public officials. See App. 87-88, 304-10.

At most, March’s speech may indicate personal disloyalty toward Wolff. But the “policymaking employee exception does not immunize public employer action unconnected to and unmotivated by need for political loyalty.” Bonds, 207 F.3d at 979 (emphasis added). Thus, even when an employee’s speech suggests that the employee is “indiscreet” or “disloyal” to a supervisor, that does not render Elrod-Branti applicable unless the speech also expresses substantive policy disagreements. Id. As just discussed, March’s speech did no such thing. His cooperation with Yerges, “unrelated to job duties or political viewpoint,” thus “runs too remote from the interests that animate the [Elrod-Branti] exception.” Id.

2. The broad view of the Elrod-Branti exception embraced by the district court conflicts with its purpose. The exception seeks to ensure that elected officials are not “undercut by tactics obstructing the implementation of policies … presumably sanctioned by the electorate.” Hagan, 867 F.3d at 824 (quoting Elrod, 427 U.S. at 367). But in electing officials, the public does not sanction corruption. Quite the contrary. “Exposing governmental inefficiency and misconduct is a matter of considerable significance” to the public. Garcetti v. Ceballos, 547 U.S. 410, 425 (2006). The district court’s understanding of the First Amendment “would place public employees who witness corruption in an impossible position, torn between the obligation to testify truthfully and the desire to avoid retaliation and keep their jobs.” Lane, 573 U.S. at 241.

Any member of the public can blow the whistle. But chilling government employees from reporting public corruption would especially hamper efforts to root it out because these employees are often best positioned to witness official wrongdoing. See Lane, 573 U.S. at 236. This is particularly true for policymakers, who frequently occupy senior roles that expose them to signs of possible corruption.

Application of Elrod-Branti is especially problematic in situations like March’s, where a public employee has done nothing more than respond to law-enforcement inquiries when approached. Applying Elrod-Branti under these circumstances would discourage government employees from giving “truthful responses to valid inquiries” about their supervisors’ corruption. Roupe v. Bay Cnty., 268 F. Supp. 2d 825, 834 (E.D. Mich. 2003). And “[n]o public official has a right to expect that his or her subordinate will prevaricate when asked a direct question.” Id. Put differently, “it would be absurd to hold that the First Amendment generally authorizes corrupt officials to punish subordinates” who speak out about their employers’ abuses of power. Noon v. City of Platte Woods, 94 F.4th 759, 766 (8th Cir. 2024) (quoting Porter v. Califano, 592 F.2d 770, 773-74 (5th Cir. 1979)).

B. Even if the Elrod-Branti exception could apply to speech about a supervisor’s abuse of office, the district court improperly used after-acquired evidence to conclude that March’s speech met the exception.

Even assuming (incorrectly) that Elrod-Branti provides the proper framework, the district court misapplied the after-acquired evidence rule to conclude that March’s speech fell under that exception. The court relied on text messages between March and Gehring acquired in discovery to “support[] Wolff’s contention that March was working with Gehring in opposition to the Wolff-led faction of the Board.”<sup>3</sup> Dist. Ct. Op., ECF 123, at 22. As already explained (at 10-11), the district court then (erroneously) concluded that this political motivation permitted the Board to fire March under Elrod-Branti.

The after-acquired evidence rule permits an employer to limit damages by offering later-obtained evidence of conduct that would have lawfully justified the employee’s termination. McKennon v. Nash. Banner Publ’g Co., 513 U.S. 352, 362 (1995). Plaintiffs cannot recover damages accrued after the fireable offense came to light. See id. But that evidence <sup>3</sup> Although the district court referenced “March’s email exchanges with Gehring,” ECF 123, at 22, this appears to have been an inadvertent error, as the Defendants cited text messages, not emails, between March and Gehring to show they were “politically allied.” Def. Wolff’s Mot. for Summ. J., ECF 43, at 4.

---

“does not retroactively erase the violation.” Cuff v. Trans States Holdings, 768 F.3d 605, 609 (7th Cir. 2014); see McKennon, 513 U.S. at 356-57.

The district court mistakenly used after-acquired evidence to permit Defendants to escape liability altogether for their First Amendment violation. At most, the damages Defendants owe may have been limited once Gehring’s and March’s text messages were discovered. But Defendants had no knowledge of the text messages when they terminated March in May 2023, so the messages shed no light on their motivations at the time. See App. 34 (Wolff’s allegations). That’s presumably why Wolff admitted that he had “no idea how deep the connection was” between March and Gehring until long after March had been fired, when the text messages surfaced in discovery. App. 74. Defendants cannot benefit under Elrod-Branti by citing (purported) political associations that were unknown to them when they fired March.

And given that the district court relied on the messages to conclude that March was politically opposed to Wolff (and aligned with Gehring), see ECF 123, at 22, reversal is required.

C. Even if Elrod-Branti did apply, a reasonable jury could find that March’s speech was not politically motivated.

Even if we assume (counterfactually) that Elrod-Branti applies to speech reporting a supervisor’s misconduct to law enforcement, summary judgment would still be inappropriate for another reason: The evidence does not indisputably show that March’s speech was politically motivated. In holding otherwise, the district court relied largely on two pieces of evidence: (1) March’s text messages with Gehring and (2) March’s supposed lack of intervention to stop the Champion Pond contract. Dist. Ct. Op., ECF 123, at 22. But this purported evidence does not compel the district court’s conclusion and is contradicted by the record, so a reasonable jury could find that March did not participate in the DOJ investigation because of his political views or affiliations.

1. Text messages. Even if the district court did not mistakenly rely on after-acquired evidence, a reasonable jury could disagree with its conclusion that the text messages between March and Gehring show that March cooperated with the DOJ investigation because he was working with Gehring to undermine the Wolff-led faction of the Board. See Dist. Ct. Op., ECF 123, at 22.

Begin with the dates of the text messages. The first supposedly relevant message was sent in April 2022, App. 65, six months after March’s first meeting with Agent Yerges. The other messages were sent between January and June of 2023, more than a year after March told Yerges about the Champion Pond contract. App. 54-64. A reasonable jury could thus find that messages sent long after March and Yerges’s conversation shed no light on why March cooperated with Yerges many months earlier.

And to the extent the messages indicate March’s support of Gehring, a jury could find that this alliance stemmed from Defendants’ reaction to his cooperation with Yerges—not from some preexisting loyalty to Gehring. By spring 2022, Defendants were aggressively searching for the person(s) who had generated the investigation into Wolff’s unlawful activities, and they had indicated they would retaliate against any employees who had participated. See supra at 7-8; see, e.g., App. 141 (describing how Wolff threatened March that he had a “plan” for him and that “[t]he games [were] over”); App. 194-205 (letter from the Board to the FBI accusing March and other Town employees of inappropriate conduct leading to the investigation into Wolff). Gehring was the only Board member who opposed that retaliation. See, e.g., App. 169 (Gehring challenged other supervisors’ justifications for firing March); App. 334 (Gehring pushed back on Wolff at Board meeting after Wolff made comments criticizing Town employees). A reasonable jury could find that March grew closer to Gehring because Gehring did not participate in the retaliation—which, again, says nothing about why March cooperated with the DOJ investigation months earlier.

The remaining text messages, which begin in 2023 (as noted, well after the DOJ investigation), concerned the upcoming Board election of new candidate Elizabeth English. App. 58-61. When asked about these text messages, March said he did not have a political preference “prior to the election” other than “stat[ing] many times that I thought there should be a woman on the board” and that a political action committee’s support of English “was interesting.” App. 126, 128. Thus, though March may have favored English for these specific reasons, his support in no way shows he was working with a Gehring-aligned faction of the Board over a year earlier, let alone that he cooperated with Yerges for that reason—or, at the least, so a reasonable jury could conclude.

2. March’s inability to stop Wolff’s illegal contract. The district court also relied on March’s supposed failure to stop the Champion Pond contract as evidence that he was working with Gehring against “a Wolff-led faction of the Board.” Dist. Ct. Op., ECF 123, at 22. In the court’s view, because March expressed suspicion in his interview with Yerges about the legality of the Champion Pond contract, failing to stop the contract showed that March intentionally entrapped Wolff. Id.

But March did in fact raise concerns about the contract before the Board voted, telling Wolff that Lake Shore Cleaners could not submit contracts to the Town while Wolff remained its owner. App. 91-92. Wolff responded (falsely, as it turned out) that he had retired and sold the company. App. 92, 104. When March later suspected that Wolff had not sold his company after all, he again approached Wolff, who asserted he was still in the process of divesting but had been delayed. App. 104. March cannot be faulted for believing what Wolff told him and not continuing to object.

And even if March had some lingering suspicions of Wolff, a reasonable jury could conclude he did not press the issue for multiple reasons other than seeking to entrap Wolff. First, it is unclear whether March knew that the Lake Shore Cleaners contract was illegal; after all, March's research (and the Town Attorney) suggested it may have been legal under a statutory exemption governing erosion control. App. 37, 71-72, 95. March affirmatively raised that exemption to Agent Yerges in one of his interviews, App. 308, which someone intent on entrapping Wolff would not have done.

March also may well have feared Wolff's response if he questioned, yet again, whether the Champion Pond contract was legal. When March did so earlier, Wolff became "angry" and "stormed out of [March's] office." App. 94. Thus, a reasonable jury could find that March's non-intervention did not indicate that he cooperated with Agent Yerges because he was politically opposed to Wolff—which, again, was the theory that undergirded the district court's holding that March's speech to Yerges was unprotected.

II. March's responses to Agent Yerges's questions are protected by the First Amendment under Pickering.

Because the Elrod-Branti exception does not apply, March's speech must be analyzed under the standard Pickering framework. March meets each element of that test: (1) He spoke to Yerges as a citizen, (2) outside the scope of his official duties, (3) about a matter of public concern. See Garcetti v. Ceballos, 547 U.S. 410, 418, 423 (2006); Lane v. Franks, 573 U.S. 228, 236-38 (2014); Pickering v. Bd. of Educ., 391 U.S. 563, 571, 574 (1968). And the public's interest in exposing government corruption, an interest furthered by March’s disclosures, outweighed any countervailing government interest in suppressing March’s cooperation with the investigation. See Lane, 573 U.S. at 241-42. Thus, Defendants’ decision to punish March by firing him ran afoul of the First Amendment.

A. March spoke as a citizen outside the scope of his official duties during his interviews with Agent Yerges.

1. March’s disclosures to Yerges fell outside the scope of March’s official job duties, so they are eligible for protection under the First Amendment. See Garcetti v. Ceballos, 547 U.S. 410, 421-22 (2006). Participating in criminal investigations did not form part of March’s “daily professional activities,” as defined either by his written job description or in practice. Chrzanowski v. Bianchi, 725 F.3d 734, 739 (7th Cir. 2013) (quoting Garcetti, 547 U.S. at 422); Sweet v. Town of Bargersville, 18 F.4th 273, 278 (7th Cir. 2021). Nor did the Town Board “commission[] or create[]” March’s speech. Chrzanowski, 725 F.3d at 738 (quoting Garcetti, 547 U.S. at 422).

Start with March’s job description. His duties primarily included strategic planning and management of Town operations, employees, budget, and departments; the description nowhere listed participating in law-enforcement interviews. See App. 150-51. And because March’s job description was updated based on his feedback to accurately reflect the practical realities of his job, it provides good evidence of his day-to-day work. App. 134-35. Consistent with his job description, March did not view discussions with DOJ investigators as one of his professional duties. App. 217. In contrast to a prosecutor or police officer, making statements to aid in criminal investigations or prosecutions had nothing to do with his job. Compare Chrzanowski, 725 F.3d at 740, with Garcetti, 547 U.S. at 421.

To be sure, March's duties included acting as a Board liaison to "other agencies and units of government." App. 102. But his responses to Agent Yerges fall outside that role because those responsibilities presuppose that March was acting on behalf of the Town. As liaison for the Board, March would convey the Board's views, not his own. But here, the Board did not ask March to participate in Yerges's investigation or in any way consult with him about the meeting or direct his responses. See Chrzanowski, 725 F.3d at 740-41; see also Kristofek v. Vill. of Orland Hills, 832 F.3d 785, 793-94 (7th Cir. 2016) (an order from a supervisor can indicate that speech falls within an employee's official duties). Nor did the Board ask DOJ to investigate Wolff. See Howell v. Town of Ball, 827 F.3d 515, 524 (5th Cir. 2016).

2. Because March's speech fell outside his official duties, it's clear that his statements were citizen speech of the type recognized in Lane v. Franks, 573 U.S. 228, 239-40 (2014). There, "[t]ruthful testimony under oath by a public employee outside the scope of his ordinary job duties" qualified as citizen speech protected by the First Amendment. Id. at 238.

March's statements are similar in all relevant respects to the testimony in Lane. Like March, Lane spoke on the topic of public corruption—the misuse of funds in a public program. Lane, 73 U.S. at 241. And just as Lane could not testify untruthfully without perjuring himself, id. at 238-39, Wisconsin law prevented March (like all other citizens) from “obstruct[ing]” Yerges’s lawful, official investigation by mispresenting the facts or answering Yerges falsely. Wis. Stat. § 946.41(1); see State v. Caldwell, 454 N.W.2d 13, 15-16 (Wis. Ct. App. 1990). Thus, like Lane, March “b[ore] an obligation” to “society at large, to tell the truth,” which sets his speech “apart from speech made purely in the capacity of an employee.” Lane, 573 U.S. at 238-39. And even though March, unlike Lane, did not make his disclosures under oath, the context of a criminal investigation likewise confirmed the “gravity” of his responses and that his statements could affect Wolff’s “rights and liberties.” Id. at 241.

Houskins v. Sheahan, 549 F.3d 480 (7th Cir. 2008), provides further support. There, this Court held that a public employee’s statements to the police concerning a coworker’s misconduct were protected because they were “similar to reports filed by citizens every day.” Id. at 491. Like a police report, March’s responses to Agent Yerges were quintessential citizen speech. About sixty-five percent of public-corruption investigations rely on citizen statements. Kristine Artello & Jay S. Albanese, Rising to the Surface: The Detection of Public Corruption, 21

Criminology, Crim. Just., L. & Soc'y., Apr. 2020, at 5; see also Freitag v. Ayers, 468 F.3d 528, 545 (9th Cir. 2006) (observing that a public employee's "right to complain both to an elected public official and to an independent state agency is guaranteed to any citizen in a democratic society").

The "mere fact" that March's knowledge of the Champion Pond bid "concerns information acquired by virtue of his public employment" does not render that speech unprotected. Lane, 573 U.S. at 240 (quoting Pickering, 391 U.S. at 572). The only question "is whether the speech at issue is itself ordinarily within the scope of an employee's duties." Id. Here, as already explained (at 27-28), March's speech does not fall within his official duties. And with that established, March's speech "holds special value precisely because" information gleaned through his public employment provided him with "informed and definite" opinions. Lane, 573 U.S. at 240.

B. March's speech was on a matter of public concern.

Statements concerning "corruption in a public program and misuse of state funds ... obviously involve[] a matter of significant public concern." Lane, 573 U.S. at 241. Indeed, "[w]hether public officials are operating the government ethically and legally is a quintessential issue of public concern." Greer v. Amesqua, 212 F.3d 358, 371 (7th Cir. 2000). Here, March told Agent Yerges that Wolff's business obtained a public contract in possible violation of state law. App. 87, 305-06, 308. March also reported that Wolff might have misrepresented his residency in Grand Chute to maintain Board eligibility. App. 305. Under Lane, these reports of corruption are of public concern.

The context of March's disclosures underscores the point. See Lane, 573 U.S. at 241. An interview with a DOJ special investigator has the "formality and gravity" necessary to remind March that his statements "will be the basis for official governmental action." Id. (quoting United States v. Alvarez, 567 U.S. 709, 721 (2012)). When he participated in the interview, March knew that any action taken by DOJ because of his statements would affect not only Wolff, but also the constituents of Grand Chute.

C. The public's interest in rooting out government corruption outweighs the Town's asserted interest in efficient provision of government services.

Because March spoke as a citizen on a matter of public concern—government corruption and malfeasance—the Court must balance March's interest in his speech against a valid government interest in suppressing it. Lane v. Franks, 573 U.S. 228, 242 (2014). When an "employee's speech more substantially involve[s] matters of public concern," the government must make a stronger showing to overcome the public's interest in that speech. Id. (quoting Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138, 152 (1983)).

Here, March and the public have an interest in “exposing governmental inefficiency and misconduct,” which “is a matter of considerable significance.” Garcetti v. Ceballos, 547 U.S. 410, 425 (2006). On their side of the ledger, Defendants assert that speech like March’s impedes workplace “discipline or harmony,” Defs.’ Mot. for Summ. J., ECF 90, at 11-12, thereby frustrating the “effective and efficient fulfillment of [the government’s] responsibilities to the public.” Lane, 573 U.S. at 242 (quoting Connick, 461 U.S. at 150).

It’s not only that the government’s interest doesn’t outweigh March’s; it’s that the government lacks any legitimate countervailing interest at all because March’s speech affirmatively serves the government’s asserted interest. Government efficiency is furthered by law-enforcement interviews with public employees like March because “[a]n employee’s ability to highlight the misuse of public funds or breaches of public trust is a critical weapon in the fight against government corruption and inefficiency.” Wainscott v. Henry, 315 F.3d 844, 849 (7th Cir. 2003). After all, “efficiency” must be understood in context; it’s not efficient to squelch speech that helps investigators uncover public corruption. Put differently, the kind of misconduct alleged here is inherently inefficient. “[W]hen an employee exposes unscrupulous behavior in the workplace, his interests are co-extensive with those of his employer; both want the organization to function in a proper manner.” Marohnic v. Walker, 800 F.2d 613, 616 (6th Cir. 1986); see Hudson v. Washington Cnty., 1993 WL 100093, at *3 (6th Cir. Apr. 5, 1993) (“[P]ublic employees’ speech regarding corruption increases efficiency by aiding in the disclosure of fraud and other misconduct.”).

A jury could find that the place and manner of March’s speech did not threaten the efficiency or harmony of his workplace. See Connick, 461 U.S. at 151-53. March spoke with Agent Yerges privately, App. 304, 317, and told his colleagues about the interviews only when asked repeatedly by Defendants. See App. 109-10, 260. It was Defendants who then went public: expressing hostility toward March and others who had cooperated, repeatedly cornering them, and decrying the investigation to the public. E.g., App. 122-24, 139-41. Any threat to “working together effectively and efficiently,” Dist. Ct. Op., ECF 123, at 21, stemmed from Defendants’ conduct, not from March’s private interview responses.

III. A reasonable jury could find that March’s protected speech motivated Defendants to terminate him.

To prevail on his First Amendment claim, March must “produce evidence” that his protected speech was a “motivating factor” for his termination. Kidwell v. Eisenhauer, 679 F.3d 957, 965 (7th Cir. 2012). That is, he must point to evidence from which a reasonable jury could conclude that “the protected speech caused, or at least played a substantial part in, the employer’s decision to terminate.” Klunk v. Cnty. of St. Joseph, 170 F.3d 772, 775 (7th Cir. 1999). The district court did not reach this question because it held that March’s speech was not protected. Dist. Ct. Op., ECF 123, at 23, 26. But as just shown (at 26-33), March’s speech was protected. And because the record also reflects genuine disputes of material fact as to whether March’s speech motivated his termination, this Court should reverse the grant of summary judgment.

At summary judgment, the initial burden was on March to produce evidence that his speech was a motivating factor in Defendants’ decision to fire him. See Kidwell, 679 F.3d at 965. The burden then shifted to Defendants to offer non-retaliatory reasons for the termination. See McGreal v. Vill. of Orland Park, 850 F.3d 308, 313 (7th Cir. 2017). Finally, March bore the burden of showing that these reasons are pretextual. See id. March has met both of his burdens.

A. A reasonable jury could find that March’s speech motivated the Board to fire him. Defendants knew that March had participated in the investigation. App. 139-41, 260. They expressed hostility toward him as a result and repeatedly cornered him to discuss the investigation. App. 139-41. In fact, Wolff explicitly threatened March after discovering that he cooperated with DOJ, telling him that he had a “plan” for him and that “[t]he games [were] over.” App. 141.

Outside observers reached the same conclusion. Gehring testified that he believed Defendants fired March to punish him for his First Amendment-protected speech. App. 207-09. And when Van Eperen asked HR Director Brinkman about terminating March, shortly after learning that March had participated in law-enforcement interviews, Brinkman warned that the Board could face a retaliation claim for firing him. App. 352-53. A reasonable jury could thus infer that Defendants fired March because of his assistance with DOJ's investigation.

B. March has also proffered evidence that Defendants' non-retaliatory justifications for his termination are pretextual. To begin with, a reasonable jury could find based solely on the strength of March's evidence of retaliatory intent that Defendants' purported justifications were "mere front[s] for an ulterior, unlawful motive." Valentino v. Vill. of S. Chi. Heights, 575 F.3d 664, 673 (7th Cir. 2009).

And Defendants' litany of non-retaliatory reasons for firing March, while numerous, see Def.'s Proposed Findings of Fact, ECF 88, at 12-17 (¶¶ 95-97, 102-03, 112-13, 115-20), do not withstand scrutiny. Defendants first point to alleged deficiencies in March's performance. See App. 235-39 (¶¶ 17a, b, d, i, j, k), 242 (¶ 12), 244-45 (¶ 16). Those professed concerns were never brought to March's attention prior to his termination. App. 136-37. He only learned of his supposed performance problems after Defendants prepared to fire him. App. 137; see App. 221 (¶ 61). A jury can find performance-related justifications for firing an employee pretextual when the employer has not previously raised them. Peirick v. Indiana Univ.-Purdue Univ. Indianapolis Athletics Dep't, 510 F.3d 681, 692-93 (7th Cir. 2007). Moreover, Van Eperen told the Board during a meeting only a few weeks prior to March's termination that March had met all his 2023 annual job-performance goals, indicating that his performance was up-to-par. App. 220, 328.

Defendants next contend that they terminated March because he “did not inform the Board in a transparent manner that he and other upper management employees would be receiving a substantial salary increase.” App. 236 (¶ 17c). But that concern makes little sense given that the Board had access to the documentation reflecting March’s pay and had approved his salary. App. 169. A reasonable jury could thus find that this claimed justification shields an unconstitutional motive.

Defendants also assert that they fired March because he was “working behind the scenes” to “turn Town staff against certain Board members” and “stonewall the Board’s wishes, delay or kill certain projects, policies and ordinances, and otherwise generate bad publicity for a majority of the members.” App. 237-38 (¶¶ 17f, g). This justification lacks specificity. And to the extent it is a variation of the argument that March was working to oppose a Wolff-led faction of the Board, that is disputed, as we have explained (at 22-25).

IV. Defendants are not entitled to qualified immunity.

The district court concluded that qualified immunity was an alternative ground for granting summary judgment because any rights March had were not clearly established. Dist. Ct. Op., ECF 123, at 25-26; see also Ashcroft v. al-Kidd, 563 U.S. 731, 735 (2011). For a right to be clearly established, it must be “sufficiently clear ‘that every reasonable official would [have understood] that what he is doing violates that right.’” Reichle v. Howards, 566 U.S. 658, 664 (2012) (quoting Ashcroft, 563 U.S. at 741) (alteration in original)).

As an initial matter, the Town of Grand Chute is not entitled to qualified immunity. “[M]unicipalities have no immunity from damages liability flowing from their constitutional violations.” Owen v. City of Independence, 445 U.S. 622, 657 (1980); see Johnson v. City of Shelby, 574 U.S. 10, 11 (2014) (noting that “[n]o ‘qualified immunity analysis’ is implicated” because the plaintiffs “asserted a constitutional claim against the city only”) (citation omitted).<sup>4</sup>

Qualified immunity also does not shield the individual Defendants. Marshall v. Porter County Plan Commission clearly established that March had a right not to be retaliated against for speaking to a DOJ investigator. 32 F.3d 1215 (7th Cir. 1994). As discussed (at 16), in Marshall, the plaintiff was fired after exposing public corruption to her employers. 32 F.3d at 1218. This Court held that Marshall’s speech about activities “that result in the misuse of public funds and trust,” id. at 1220-21, was protected by the First Amendment—even assuming she was a

---

<sup>4</sup> It is unclear whether the district court held that the Town was entitled to qualified immunity. The court referred in its qualified-immunity discussion to the individual Defendants alone, Dist. Ct. Op., ECF 123, at 23-26, but did not explicitly carve out the Town.

policymaker—because her speech did not express “political or policy viewpoints,” Bonds v. Milwaukee Cnty., 207 F.3d 969, 979 (7th Cir. 2000) (discussing Marshall). This Court then upheld the district court’s application of the Pickering balancing test and the jury’s verdict that she could not be discharged for that speech. Marshall, 32 F.3d at 1221.

The facts here are like those in Marshall. Both Marshall, an executive secretary responsible for reviewing zoning plans, Marshall, 32 F.3d at 1218, and March were likely policymakers. Both reported potentially corrupt behavior by their superiors and were terminated for doing so. And neither March’s nor Marshall’s job duties apparently included identifying or speaking about corruption. See id. at 1217 (describing Marshall’s job duties). Thus, Marshall alone put Defendants on notice that March’s speech was protected.

But that’s not all. Lane also clearly established the right at issue here. As explained (at 17, 28-29), Lane held that speech reporting corruption—by a likely policymaker—and falling outside the scope of an employee’s official duties is protected under the First Amendment, even when the speech “relates to [one’s] public employment or concerns information learned during that employment.” Lane v. Franks, 573 U.S. 228, 238 (2014). Accordingly, Defendants were on notice that speech about public corruption, even by a policymaker, is protected under the First Amendment and cannot serve as the basis for discharge.

Several of this Court’s cases have likewise held that speech reporting public corruption to law enforcement is protected. For example, in Kristofek v. Village of Orland Hills, a police officer was fired after contacting the FBI to report concerns about a police chief who corruptly voided traffic citations. 832 F.3d 785, 790-91 (7th Cir. 2016). This Court held that the officer’s reporting of government malfeasance “clearly involve[d] a matter of public concern,” even if he was motivated “at least in part” by his own “self-interest” in avoiding “being punished somehow if the details surrounding the voided citations came to light.” Id. at 794-95. Thus, it was “clearly established ... that the First Amendment prohibited retaliating against a public employee because he had spoken with colleagues and with the FBI about public corruption.” Id. at 798.

In rejecting qualified immunity, Kristofek relied on decisions of this Court establishing the same principle. See 832 F.3d at 798-99 (citing Spiegla v. Hull, 371 F.3d 928, 937 (7th Cir. 2004) (speech reporting “official corruption” by prison employees to the prison’s Assistant Superintendent was protected); Valentino v. Vill. of S. Chi. Heights, 575 F.3d 664, 678 (7th Cir. 2009) (speech to local good-governance advocate criticizing “Defendants’ practices of nepotism and alleged ghost payrolling” was protected)). This caselaw clearly establishes that speech exposing public corruption has long been protected by the First Amendment, so qualified immunity cannot support the district court’s grant of summary judgment to the individual Defendants.

Conclusion

This Court should reverse the district court's grant of summary judgment to Defendants and remand for trial on March's First Amendment claim against all Defendants.

Respectfully submitted,

Michael R. Fox
Christopher M. Kloth
Fox & Fox, S.C.

Jeff Scott Olson
Jeff Scott Olson Law Firm,
S.C.

Zoe Ades
Isabel Elena Bowman
Veronica Hayes
Student Counsel

/s/ Natasha R. Khan
Natasha R. Khan
Brian Wolfman
Becca Steinberg
GEORGETOWN LAW APPELLATE
COURTS IMMERSION CLINIC
600 New Jersey Ave., NW,
Suite 312
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 661-6582
wolfmanb@georgetown.edu

Counsel for Appellant James March

December 5, 2025

Certificate of Compliance

In accordance with Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 32(g), I certify that this brief:

- (i) complies with the type-volume limitation of Rule 32(a)(7)(B) and Circuit Rule 32(c) because it contains 8,986 words, including footnotes and excluding the parts of the brief exempted by Rule 32(f); and
- (ii) complies with the typeface requirements of Rule 32(a)(5) and the type-style requirements of Rule 32(a)(6) because it has been prepared using Microsoft Office Word 2016, set in Century Schoolbook in 14-point type.

/s/ Natasha R. Khan

Natasha R. Khan

Attached Appendix

Certificate of Circuit Rule 30 Compliance

In accordance with Circuit Rule 30(d), I certify that this appendix contains all of the materials required by Circuit Rule 30(a) and that the separately submitted appendix contains all of the materials required by Circuit Rule 30(b).

/s/ Natasha R. Khan

Natasha R. Khan

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
EASTERN DISTRICT OF WISCONSIN

---

JAMES MARCH,

Plaintiff,

v.

Case No. 23-C-656

TOWN OF GRAND CHUTE, RONALD WOLFF,
JASON VAN EPEREN, and JEFFREY INGS,

Defendants.

---

DECISION AND ORDER ON CROSS-MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

---

James March filed this action against the Town of Grand Chute and three members of its Board of Supervisors: Ronald Wolff, Jason Van Eperen, and Jeffrey Ings, under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, alleging that they violated his First Amendment and due process rights by terminating his position as Town Administrator in retaliation for his cooperation with a criminal investigation of the individual defendants' alleged misconduct. Wolff countered with his own § 1983 claim, alleging that March had violated his First Amendment rights by setting him up for a criminal investigation in retaliation for Wolff's political activity. Wolff also alleges that March's conduct violated his right to equal protection of the law in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. The court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331, and the case is before the court on Defendants' motion for summary judgment on March's claims against them, including Wolff's separate motion for summary judgment, and March's motion for summary judgment on Wolff's counterclaims. For the reasons set forth below, summary judgment will be granted on all claims and the case will be dismissed in its entirety.

BACKGROUND

The Town of Grand Chute is located in Outagamie County, Wisconsin, and has a population of roughly 23,000. It is governed by a five-member Board of Supervisors, one of whom serves as Chairperson. In 2008, the Town hired James March as Town Administrator pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 60.37(3). As Administrator, March was the highest unelected official in the Town and was “to oversee all Town functions and Utility operations, implement Town Board policies, administer Town services, and coordinate Town functions and operations with other agencies and units of government.” Dkt. No. 26-1 at 10. Among the “Essential Duties and Responsibilities” listed in his contract were the following:

Develops and recommends policies for providing Town services.

Acts as Town liaison to other agencies and units of government.

Develops and administers personnel policies.

Attends and participates in Town Board and other constituted Town Commission, Board, and Committee meetings. Prepares and submits reports regarding Town government and utility activities. Provides recommendations to the Board and other duly constituted Commissions, Boards, and Committees.

Represents the Town to the public and developers regarding proposals, requests for services, and requests for information.

...

Develops and reviews annual budget. Prepares budget reports, monitors expenditures, recommends staffing and expenditure levels.

...

Maintain knowledge of County, State, and Federal legislation affecting Town; availability of County, State, and Federal funding for Town functions; budget development and administration principles; and Town and area development trends.

Id.

In 2019, Wolff joined a group of Grand Chute residents in opposing what they viewed as unreasonably high special assessments that the Town had been levying on property to fund street improvement and infrastructure projects. Wolff participated in several lawsuits challenging various assessments on his own property. Wolff, along with Van Eperen and Ings, then ran for and won seats on the Town Board in 2020 and 2021 on the issues of special assessments and fiscal mismanagement, giving them majority control. Prior to Wolff's election to the Board, March conveyed to Susan Brinkman, the Town's Human Resources Director, that he had heard that, if Wolff was elected to the Town Board, then Wolff planned to fire him, along with Brinkman and Director of Public Works Katie Schwartz. Dkt. No. 116 ¶ 118. After the election of Wolff and his allies, Van Eperen became Chairman of the Board. Dkt. No. 89 ¶ 7. Brad Gehring, whom Wolff viewed as the leader of the faction opposing his reform efforts, held the fourth seat on the Board, and Walter Nocito held the fifth. Id. ¶ 9; Dkt. No. 109-16 at 3. Gehring had previously served as Outagamie County Sheriff for roughly twenty-eight years. See Dkt. No. 109-1 at 3.

The job of a Town Supervisor is part-time. Prior to his election to the Town Board, Wolff owned and operated Lake Shore Cleaners, Inc., a company that does landscape work in the Grand Chute area. Dkt. No. 116 ¶¶ 6, 8. He continued to operate his business for some time after his election. Ings was an employee of Lake Shore. See Dkt. No. 93-1 at 7. Over the years, Lake Shore frequently performed landscaping work as a subcontractor for McMahon Engineering. McMahon on occasion performed engineering work for Grand Chute. On May 5, 2021, shortly after he was sworn in as a new Town Supervisor, Wolff received from McMahon a request for a bid from Lake Shore for site preparation and seeding for the Grand Chute Champion Pond Project. Dkt. No. 116 ¶ 16. Wolff submitted a quote on behalf of Lake Shore for the pond work and vegetation planting at a cost of $26,856.09. Id. ¶ 18. On May 27, 2021, McMahon advised Wolff that Lake Shore's quote had been approved by Grand Chute and directed the company to start administering herbicide at the site. Id. ¶ 22.

Under Wisconsin law, a public officer or employee commits a felony if, in his or her private capacity, he or she:

negotiates or bids for or enters into a contract in which the officer or employee has a private pecuniary interest, direct or indirect, if at the same time the officer or employee is authorized or required by law to participate in the officer's or employee's capacity as such officer or employee in the making of that contract or to perform in regard to that contract some official function requiring the exercise of discretion on the officer's or employee's part.

Wis. Stat. § 946.13(1)(a). Contracts "that do not involve receipts and disbursements by the state or its political subdivision aggregating more than $15,000 in any year" are excepted, § 946.13(2)(a), and any contract entered into in violation of the statute "is void and the state or the political subdivision in whose behalf the contract was made incurs no liability thereon," § 946.13(3). The Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that a violation of § 946.13(1) is a strict liability offense. State v. Stoehr, 134 Wis. 2d 66, 82, 396 N.W.2d 177 (1986).

Although there is evidence that March provided Wolff materials specifically advising him of this statute as part of his orientation as a new Board member, Wolff denies that he knew of the provision when he submitted the bid on behalf of Lake Shore and no one on the Town staff, including March, brought it to his attention. There was some discussion among the Town's staff concerning the propriety of the bid. It also appears that the Town's attorney was asked whether the landscape work was a statutory public works project requiring public bidding. The attorney advised Deputy Public Works Director Karen Heyrman that it was not and that, in any event, no other bids were received, the bid was close to the estimate, and Lake Shore was qualified to perform the work. He said nothing about any potential problem under § 946.13. Dkt. No. 77-16.

March claims that Wolff told him he had or was in the process of divesting himself of any interest in Lake Shore and selling the company to his son.

In any event, Lake Shore's quote was formally taken up at a joint meeting of the Grand Chute Board and Sanitary District on June 1, 2021. The quote, which Wolff had signed as president of Lake Shore, was included with the agenda items compiled by the Town staff. The minutes of the meeting reflect that Gehring asked whether the job had been bid out but was informed by the Director of Public Works that the Lake Shore proposal was the only one received back and, since it was a maintenance item, no formal proposals were needed. Gehring, together with a member of the Sanitary District, then moved to approve Lake Shore's quote. Wolff and Ings abstained, but the motion still carried. The minutes reflect that March was present but did not offer any advice or comment on the Lake Shore bid. Dkt. No. 77-17.

Sometime in the fall of 2021, Gehring filed a complaint with the Town Clerk challenging Wolff's residency and thereby his eligibility to serve as a Town Supervisor. See Dkt. No. 108 ¶ 15. Gehring had previously contacted the Outagamie County District Attorney about the matter and was referred to the Public Integrity Unit of the Wisconsin Department of Justice (DOJ). After the Town Clerk rejected his challenge to Wolff's residency, Gehring contacted the Wisconsin DOJ. On October 4, 2021, Gehring met with Special Agent Jay Yerges of the DOJ's Division of Criminal Investigation (DCI) and conveyed to him the evidence he had gathered that he believed showed that Wolff had lied under oath about being a resident of Grand Chute in the legally required filings for his candidacy. Gehring also advised Agent Yerges about his concerns that Wolff, Van Eperen, and Ings had privately discussed Town matters outside of official meetings, in particular, the pending litigation by Wolff and others over special assessments; that Ings had revealed to Wolff and others private information concerning the mediation of those claims; and that Wolff's company had entered into a contract with the Town under which it was to receive a substantial sum of money. Dkt. No. 109-46.

Later that same day, Agent Yerges also interviewed March. The interview with March took place in March's office at the Grand Chute town hall during normal business hours. Id. According to Agent Yerges' report, March conveyed essentially the same concerns Gehring had, including information relating to the Town's ongoing civil litigation being "leaked"; certain Supervisors (Wolff, Van Eperen, and Ings) partaking in "walking quorums" in violation of Wisconsin's Open Meetings law, Wis. Stat. §§ 19.81 et seq.; Wolff's use of a personal email address to conduct Town business; Lake Shore's business dealings with the Town; and Wolff's residency. Dkt. No. 109-47 at 1–6. Agent Yerges followed up with March on October 27, 2021. Id. at 7. The record indicates that March met with and exchanged emails with Agent Yerges on several other occasions in 2022 and 2023.

As 2021 rolled over into 2022, the DCI investigation continued. On March 22, 2022, Agent Yerges executed a search warrant on Wolff's home and properties. See Dkt. No. 78 ¶ 22. Wolff later filed a separate § 1983 action against Agent Yerges in the Western District of Wisconsin, claiming that the search warrant was unconstitutionally vague and overbroad, and that Yerges and other law enforcement officers had executed it in an unconstitutional manner. According to the decision dismissing Wolff's lawsuit against Agent Yerges on ground of qualified immunity, the warrant authorized the seizure of documents, computers, including computer hardware devices, internal and external drives, routers, modems, storage devices, and related manuals evidencing or tending to evidence possible misconduct in office. Wolff v. Virgil, No. 22-cv-127-wmc, 2023 WL 8233136, at *2 (W.D. Wis. Oct. 23, 2023). Among the items seized by the officers executing the warrant were "a credit card, divorce and custody paperwork, addresses of family and friends, dental work records, printed emails about a family reunion and a baby shower in 2018, printed emails about life insurance policies dated from 2015, an unemployment file, and many business records (most specifically, those for ‘Willow Lane Assisted Living’) that had nothing to do with the topics specified in the warrant.” Id. at *3. The same day he executed the search warrants on Wolff’s properties, Agent Yerges interviewed Wolff, Van Eperen, and Ings concerning the reports involving them he had received from Gehring and March. Dkt. No. 89 ¶¶ 18–20; see Dkt. Nos. 109-8 at 1, 109-53 at 1, 109-2 at 1.

In the wake of the search of Wolff’s properties, Wolff, Van Eperen, and Ings sought to investigate the origins and progress of the DCI investigation. See Dkt. No. 112 ¶¶ 27–30. Specifically, on April 14, 2022, Van Eperen emailed Town Clerk Angie Cain to add an agenda item to the upcoming Board meeting; the item was to be titled, “Investigation into the events that led up to the March 2022 state investigation of Town Board members.” Dkt. No. 111-1. On April 18, 2022, Ings and Nocito traveled to Milwaukee to submit a complaint with the Federal Bureau of Investigation’s (FBI) Milwaukee Field Office. Dkt. No. 109-25 at 1. The complaint expressed general concerns about the DCI investigation and that it might have been instigated by corrupt public officials. Id. The next day, Wolff sent an email to March expressing serious displeasure with the search of his properties and asserting that the investigation was smearing the names of Board members. Dkt. No. 111-2. Wolff closed the email with the following: “If the town will not do a [sic] investigation others will. More than frustrated.” Id.

It appears clear that by this time or shortly thereafter, Wolff, Van Eperen, and Ings were aware that March had been interviewed by Agent Yerges and was providing him information because Gehring stated as much at a Board meeting. Dkt. No. 79-10 at 3. In June 2022, Van Eperen requested March’s employment agreement from Director of Human Resources

Brinkman. Dkt. Nos. 98-1 at 15; 87-5 at 40–41. Van Eperen asserts that his reason for requesting March’s employment agreement was to better understand how past Boards had interacted with March and the agreement’s “buy out” clause. Dkt. No. 87-5 at 40. March’s employment agreement provided that his term was indefinite, subject to removal by a two-thirds vote of the Board. The agreement further provided:

1. Employee shall hold office as Town Administrator for an indefinite term, subject to removal at any time by two-thirds vote of the entire Board of Supervisors.

...

3. If termination is without cause, Employee shall receive written notice of termination thirty days prior to termination. . . . If termination without cause occurs during the fourth or succeeding years of employment, Employee shall receive six additional months’ salary and family health insurance coverage as severance compensation and any accrued benefits at the time of termination.

Dkt. No. 79-1 at 1–2. At some point, Wolff requested March’s employment agreement from Van Eperen so that he could share it with his personal attorney. Dkt. No. 87-5 at 41.

In December 2022, Ings sent a letter to Attorney General Josh Kaul, expressing concern over the origins of the DCI investigation, suggesting that it could have been motivated by a personal vendetta, and requesting any information on the progress of the investigation. Dkt. No. 79-8 at 2–3. Also in the final days of 2022, the Board assigned certain goals for March to work towards in 2023. On January 10, 2023, March emailed the entire Board a progress report on his goals and indicated he would provide quarterly progress updates. March further expressed that he found the goal system productive. Ings responded, “Thanks for the update. Good report!” Dkt. No. 79-9.

On February 11, 2023, Wolff, Van Eperen, and Ings met with Michael Koles, Executive Director of the Wisconsin Towns Association. Dkt. No. 109-37 at 3. The trio met with Koles again on March 9, 2023. Id. at 4. During that meeting, Koles was asked to provide a recommendation for an attorney experienced in resolving personnel issues and conflicts. Wolff, Van Eperen, and Ings also expressed to Koles that they were frustrated with the ongoing DCI investigation and with March as they felt his salary was too high. Id. at 4–5. On April 11, 2023, the Board convened during a special meeting to discuss retaining Attolles Law, S.C., a law firm that specializes in representing local governments, as independent counsel to review March’s employment agreement. In the discussion leading up to the vote, Van Eperen noted that March had met all his goals but that there were other concerns like salary. Van Eperen also noted that March was the only Town employee over which the Board had direct control. The Board ultimately voted to retain the Attolles law firm by a vote of four to one; Gehring was the lone dissenter. Dkt. No. 79-10 at 1–3. On April 13, 2023, the Board convened for another special meeting. The meeting agenda noticed that the Board would meet in closed session to discuss “the performance of the Town Administrator, confer with special counsel regarding the Town’s rights and responsibilities under the employment agreement with the Town Administrator and otherwise discuss the Town Board’s legal position in relation to the same.” Dkt. No. 79-11.

On May 2, 2023, the Board convened for a regular meeting to discuss the same agenda item. After tending to normal business, the Board convened in closed session for roughly one and one-half hours. Upon reconvening in open session, the Board voted by supermajority—Wolff, Van Eperen, Ings, and Elizabeth English (who had replaced Nocito) in favor; Gehring opposed—to terminate March’s employment agreement. Dkt. No. 79-13 at 1, 5; Dkt. No. 108 ¶ 91. Following the vote, Gehring commented that March’s termination was “the most disgusting thing he has ever been a part of” in his 30 years in government. Dkt. No. 79-16 at 5. Van Eperen delivered a termination letter to March the next day, notifying March that his termination would be effective on June 2, 2023, and he would receive six months’ pay and certain benefits pursuant to the terms of his employment agreement. Dkt. No. 108 ¶¶ 92–93. At Board meetings on May 16, 2023, and June 6, 2023, English moved to reconsider and discuss rehiring March as Administrator but was unsuccessful. Dkt. No. 122 ¶ 77.

On May 25, 2023, before his termination became effective, March brought this action against the Town of Grand Chute, Wolff, Van Eperen, and Ings, alleging that the termination of his employment was in retaliation for his exercise of rights protected by the First Amendment and the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. In the meantime, on July 10, 2023, Wolff was charged in Outagamie County Circuit Court with violating Wis. Stat. § 946.13(1)(a) by bidding for the landscaping portion of the Champion Pond Project. Dkt. No. 32-2. (The case later went to trial, and an Outagamie County jury returned a verdict of not guilty.) On December 1, 2023, Wolff, in turn, filed a counterclaim against March, alleging that March had engineered the criminal charge against him in retaliation for Wolff's political activity in Grand Chute, thereby violating his First Amendment right to free speech and his Fourteenth Amendment right to equal protection of the law under the “class of one” theory endorsed by the Supreme Court in Village of Willowbrook v. Olech, 528 U.S. 562 (2000) (per curiam).

LEGAL STANDARD

Summary judgment is appropriate when the movant shows there is no genuine issue of material fact, and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a); see also Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322 (1986). “Material facts” are those under the applicable substantive law that “might affect the outcome of the suit.” Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248 (1986). A dispute over a “material fact” is “genuine” if “the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party.” Id. In deciding a motion for summary judgment, the court must view the evidence and make all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Johnson v. Advoc. Health & Hosps. Corp., 892 F.3d 887, 893 (7th Cir. 2018) (citing Parker v. Four Seasons Hotels, Ltd., 845 F.3d 807, 812 (7th Cir. 2017)). “The nonmoving party must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts;” instead, it must “submit evidentiary materials that set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.” Siegel v. Shell Oil Co., 612 F.3d 932, 937 (7th Cir. 2010) (citations omitted). Summary judgment is properly entered against a party “who fails to make a showing to establish the existence of an element essential to the party’s case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial.” Austin v. Walgreen Co., 885 F.3d 1085, 1087–88 (7th Cir. 2018) (citing Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 322).

ANALYSIS

A. Defendants’ Motions for Summary Judgment

1. First Amendment Retaliation Doctrine in Public Employment

In Pickering v. Board of Education, the Court held that a public employee does not relinquish First Amendment rights to comment on matters of public interest by virtue of government employment. 391 U.S. 563, 565 (1968). A government employer therefore cannot retaliate against public employees by terminating their employment for engaging in constitutionally protected speech. Id. at 574–75. The Court also recognized, however, that the State’s interests as an employer in regulating the speech of its employees “differ significantly from those it possesses in connection with regulation of the speech of the citizenry in general.” Id. at 568. The difficulty in resolving disputes over public employee retaliatory discharge cases is in “arriving ‘at a balance between the interests of the [employee], as a citizen, in commenting upon matters of public concern and the interest of the State, as an employer, in promoting the efficiency of the public services it performs through its employees.’” Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138, 140

(1983) (alteration in original) (quoting Pickering, 391 U.S. at 568). In its effort to balance these two interests, the Court has determined that whether a public employee's speech/expression is protected depends on what was said and the role of the speaker.

To establish a First Amendment retaliation claim, a public employee must show that "(1) she engaged in constitutionally protected speech; (2) she suffered a deprivation because of her employer's action; and (3) her protected speech was a but-for cause of the employer's action." Diadenko v. Folino, 741 F.3d 751, 755 (7th Cir. 2013); see also Kidwell v. Eisenhauer, 679 F.3d 957, 965 (7th Cir. 2012) ("Initially, to establish a prima facie case of retaliation, the plaintiff must produce evidence that his speech was at least a motivating factor . . . of the employer's decision to take retaliatory action against him. Then, the burden shifts to the employer to rebut the causal inference raised by the plaintiff's evidence. If the employer fails to counter the plaintiff's evidence, then . . . the plaintiff has established the but-for causation needed to succeed on his claim." (citations omitted)).

While First Amendment retaliation claims in the context of government employment usually involve controversial comments by employees in the workplace or directed to the media, the same analysis applies to speech contained in lawsuits, petitions, or other political activity. Hagan v. Quinn, 867 F.3d 816, 823 (7th Cir. 2017) ("[F]or purposes of assessing these plaintiffs' First Amendment retaliation claims, it makes no difference that plaintiffs' expressive activity took the form of a complaint in federal court rather than a conversation in the workplace, a press conference, a Facebook post, or a tweet on Twitter." (citing Borough of Duryea v. Guarnieri, 564 U.S. 379, 395–97 (2011))). Plaintiffs can prevail in such lawsuits only if they can show that the but-for cause of their termination was "protected speech/petitioning activity." Id.

The Connick-Pickering line of cases require that, in order to be constitutionally protected, the public employee's speech must be made as a citizen about a matter of public concern. Hagan, 867 F.3d at 822. “[W]hen a public employee speaks not as a citizen upon matters of public concern, but instead as an employee upon matters only of personal interest, absent the most unusual circumstances, a federal court is not the appropriate forum in which to review the wisdom of a personnel decision taken by a public agency allegedly in reaction to the employee’s behavior.” Connick, 461 U.S. at 147. In Garcetti v. Ceballos, the Court further clarified that “when public employees make statements pursuant to their official duties, the employees are not speaking as citizens for First Amendment purposes, and the Constitution does not insulate their communications from employer discipline.” 547 U.S. 410, 421 (2006). This follows because “[g]overnment employers, like private employers, need a significant degree of control over their employees’ words and actions; without it, there would be little chance for the efficient provision of public services.” Id. at 418–19 (citing Connick, 461 U.S. at 143 (“[G]overnment offices could not function if every employment decision became a constitutional matter.”)).

In another line of cases, the Court has held that non-policymaking public employees may not be discharged simply because they are not members of the same political party as those elected to hold power. Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373 (1976); Branti v. Finkel, 445 U.S. 507, 518 (1980). A corollary of the Elrod-Branti line of cases, however, is that employees who have policymaking roles in government can be terminated for engaging in speech, even if it is about a matter of public concern, if it is “critical of superiors or their stated policies.” Hagan, 867 F.3d at 826 (quoting Kiddy-Brown v. Blagojevich, 408 F.3d 346, 358 (7th Cir. 2005)). The rationale for this second line of cases is to avoid situations in which elected officials could be “undercut by tactics obstructing the implementation of policies . . . presumably sanctioned by the electorate.”

Elrod, 427 U.S. at 367 (plurality opinion). The concern “is with the effects on the operations of government of forcing a public official to hire, or retain, in a confidential or policymaking job, persons who are not his political friends and may be his political enemies.” Wilbur v. Mahan, 3 F.3d 214, 217–18 (7th Cir. 1993). Under these circumstances, “[the public employee’s] First Amendment rights may be required to yield to the State’s vital interest in maintaining governmental effectiveness and efficiency.” Branti, 445 U.S. at 517.

The Seventh Circuit has recognized that “in cases involving the dismissal of an employee in a policymaking position, there is no need for a fact-specific analysis of the circumstances of each case mandated by Pickering.” Kiddy-Brown, 408 F.3d at 358 (citation omitted); see also Vargas-Harrison v. Racine Unified Sch. Dist., 272 F.3d 964, 971 (7th Cir. 2001) (“In essence, we have determined that, with respect to [policymaking] employees, the Pickering analysis regularly will result in a determination that the government employer’s need for political allegiance from its policymaking employee outweighs the employee’s freedom of expression to such a degree that it obviates Pickering balancing.” (internal quotations marks and citation omitted)). But “[e]ven these policymaking employees . . . possess a minimal level of First Amendment protection against retaliatory dismissal: the government cannot fire them for speech on public matters unconnected to political affiliation or policy viewpoints.” Embry v. City of Calumet City, 701 F.3d 231, 235 (7th Cir. 2012). Thus, there are two elements to the policymaker corollary to the Elrod-Branti line of cases: “First, the employee must have occupied a policy-making position. If so, his speech must have been of the kind that falls within the scope of the corollary.” Hagan, 867 F.3d at 826 (quoting Matrisciano v. Randle, 569 F.3d 723, 731 (7th Cir. 2009), abrogated in part on other grounds by Gross v. FBL Fin. Servs., Inc., 557 U.S. 167 (2009)). If both elements are met, Defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

2. Application to March's First Amendment Claim

The undisputed evidence establishes that March held a policymaking position for the Town of Grand Chute. “[T]he test for determining whether a position involves policymaking is ‘whether the position authorizes . . . meaningful input into government decisionmaking on issues where there is room for principled disagreement on goals or their implementation.’” Id. at 826 (quoting Kiddy-Brown, 408 F.3d at 355). March was the highest unelected official of the Town. His job was “to oversee all Town functions and Utility operations, implement Town Board policies, administer Town services, and coordinate Town functions and operations with other agencies and units of government.” Dkt. No. 26-1 at 10. But he was not just to implement the Board’s policies; he was to develop and recommend policies for providing Town services, as well as develop and administer personnel policies. Id. His position clearly falls within the policymaker element of the exception that Elrod and Branti recognized.

Examples of the types of jobs the Seventh Circuit has found to fall within the policymaking role, as recounted in Hagan, 867 F.3d at 827, include city commissioner of streets and allies, Embry, 701 F.3d at 236; senior humane officer for city board of public safety, Davis v. Ockomon, 668 F.3d 473, 480 (7th Cir. 2012); accounting bureau chief for state transportation department, Allen v. Martin, 460 F.3d 939, 945–46 (7th Cir. 2006); elementary school principal, Vargas-Harrison, 272 F.3d at 973; senior fiscal analyst for city block grant committee, Bonds v. Milwaukee County, 207 F.3d 969, 977 (7th Cir. 2000); subdistrict superintendent for state highway department, Selch v. Letts, 5 F.3d 1040, 1047 (7th Cir. 1993); general inspector for local health department, Heck v. City of Freeport, 985 F.2d 305, 310 (7th Cir. 1993); deputy sheriff, Upton v. Thompson, 930 F.2d 1209, 1218 (7th Cir. 1991); administrator of city parks and recreation, Bicanic v. McDermott, 867 F.2d 391, 395 (7th Cir. 1989); and assistant state’s attorney, Livas v. Petka, 711 F.2d 798, 801 (7th Cir. 1983). March's job was quintessentially a policymaking position and easily fits within this group.

Turning to the second element of the policymaker corollary, the court must determine whether the evidence is sufficient to permit a finding that March's speech was nevertheless protected. March claims the individual defendants violated his First Amendment rights by terminating him from his position as Town Administrator in retaliation for his meeting with Agent Yerges and cooperating in Yerges' investigation of official misconduct by answering Yerges' questions about the individual defendants. The individual defendants contend that they did not even know what March had told Agent Yerges at the time they voted to terminate his employment and thus could not have based their decision on what he told Agent Yerges. Dkt. No. 90 at 5. They argue that they each had their own independent reasons for voting to terminate March's contract. Id. at 17. If true, March's First Amendment claim fails, since he has asserted no other speech that he contends was constitutionally protected.

The fact that the individual defendants deny that they had any idea what March was telling Agent Yerges and assert other reasons for their vote, however, does not mean that a jury would be required to so find. A jury would not be compelled to accept their testimony. Notwithstanding their own versions of events, the evidence is sufficient to support a finding that the individual defendants believed that March was providing information to Agent Yerges long before they voted to terminate his position with the Town on May 2, 2023. Wolff's properties were searched, and Ings and Van Eperen were interviewed by Agent Yerges on March 22, 2022. The individual defendants could have concluded from the evidence sought in the search warrant and the matters they were questioned about during the interviews that someone working for the Town was accusing them of illegal activities as Board members. They then embarked on a concerted effort to find out what had led up to the DOJ's investigation. By April of 2022, they clearly knew that March had been providing information to Agent Yerges and could have reasonably concluded, or at least suspected, that the information he provided was in part what had led to the investigation and criminal charge against Wolff, especially since they viewed March as closely aligned with Gehring.

Indeed, that scenario is entirely consistent with, and forms the basis of, Wolff's lawsuit against March. Wolff argues that it was not March's mere cooperation with an independent criminal investigation that warranted his termination, but the fact that March, along with Gehring, manufactured the criminal investigation. In support of his own claim against March and in his separate motion for summary judgment, Wolff argues that March essentially set him up for criminal prosecution to have him removed from the Board by not warning him that abstaining from the vote on the Lake Shore contract was not enough to avoid criminal liability under Wis. Stat. § 946.13. Dkt. Nos. 91, 114. He notes that one of March's duties was to advise the Board on legal compliance and that it was March who compiled the materials, including information about § 946.13, that advised new Board members of legal and ethical issues that could arise while serving on the Board. Dkt. No. 114 at 2, 5. Yet, instead of bringing the matter up when the issue came for a vote at the Board meeting or suggesting that the contract be structured to avoid the full payment within a year, March said nothing and only voiced his concerns to Agent Yerges after the other Board members had approved the contract but before full payment had even been made. In fact, Wolff claims that March told him that Lake Shore's work on the Champion Pond Project would fall within an exception or "loophole" for erosion control so that Wolff would not have any problems as to compliance with § 946.13(1)(a). Dkt. No. 116 ¶ 23.

Lane v. Franks establishes that a public employee does have constitutional protection for testifying before a grand jury in a criminal investigation against his superiors. 573 U.S. 228, 242 (2014). In Lane, the former director of a community college's program for underprivileged youth brought a § 1983 action against the president of the college alleging that he had been terminated from his position in retaliation for testifying before a grand jury about the fraudulent conduct of a state representative who was on his program's payroll. Id. at 234. The district court granted the college president's motion for summary judgment on the ground that he was entitled to qualified immunity since a reasonable government official in his position would not have had reason to believe that the Constitution protected the plaintiff's testimony. In so ruling, the district court relied on Garcetti, which, as noted above, held that "when public employees make statements pursuant to their official duties, the employees are not speaking as citizens for First Amendment purposes." 547 U.S. at 421. The district court found no violation of clearly established law because the plaintiff had learned of the information that he testified about while working as the director of the program and, thus, his speech could still "be considered as part of his official job duties and not made as a citizen on a matter of public concern." Lane, 573 U.S. at 234–35. The Eleventh Circuit went further in affirming the district court's decision, holding that the plaintiff's testimony before the grand jury was not constitutionally protected since he was not speaking as a private citizen when he appeared before the grand jury. Id. at 235.

In a unanimous decision, the Supreme Court reversed and held that the plaintiff's testimony before the grand jury was constitutionally protected speech. Without addressing the question of whether the plaintiff held a policymaking position within the meaning of the Elrod-Branti corollary, the Court conducted its analysis under Pickering and focused first on the importance of such speech to the public interest in good government:

The importance of public employee speech is especially evident in the context of this case: a public corruption scandal. The United States, for example, represents that because “[t]he more than 1000 prosecutions for federal corruption offenses that are brought in a typical year . . . often depend on evidence about activities that government officials undertook while in office,” those prosecutions often “require testimony from other government employees.” Brief for United States as Amicus Curiae 20. It would be antithetical to our jurisprudence to conclude that the very kind of speech necessary to prosecute corruption by public officials—speech by public employees regarding information learned through their employment—may never form the basis for a First Amendment retaliation claim. Such a rule would place public employees who witness corruption in an impossible position, torn between the obligation to testify truthfully and the desire to avoid retaliation and keep their jobs.

Id. at 240–41.

The Court then rejected the defendant’s argument that the plaintiff’s speech was not as a private citizen but instead within the scope of his duties as defined by Garcetti. “[T]he mere fact that a citizen’s speech concerns information acquired by virtue of his public employment,” the Court held, “does not transform that speech into employee—rather than citizen—speech.” Id. at 240. The Court further concluded that the form and context of the speech—sworn testimony in a judicial proceeding—fortified its conclusion that the plaintiff’s speech was on a matter of public concern: “Unlike speech in other contexts, testimony under oath has the formality and gravity necessary to remind the witness that his or her statements will be the basis for official governmental action, action that often affects the rights and liberties of others.” Id. at 241 (quoting United States v. Alvarez, 567 U.S. 709, 721 (2012) (plurality opinion)); see also Chrzanowski v. Bianchi, 725 F.3d 734, 738 (7th Cir. 2013) (“[S]peech does not ‘owe[]’ its existence to a public employee’s professional responsibilities’ within the meaning of Garcetti simply because public employment provides a factual predicate for the expressive activity; rather, Garcetti governs speech that is made ‘pursuant to official duties’ in the sense that it is ‘government employees’ work product’ that has been ‘commissioned or created’ by the employer.” (second alteration in original) (quoting Garcetti, 547 U.S. at 422)).

Turning to the question in Pickering of whether the government had an adequate justification for treating the public employee plaintiff differently from any other member of the public based on the government’s needs as an employer, the Court noted that it had previously recognized “that government employers often have legitimate interests in the effective and efficient fulfillment of their responsibilities to the public, including promoting efficiency and integrity in the discharge of official duties, and maintaining proper discipline in public service,” and that these interests can require limitations on its employee’s First Amendment rights. Id. at 242 (quoting Connick, 461 U.S. at 150–51) (cleaned up). The Court also noted, however, that it had cautioned that “a stronger showing of government interests may be necessary if the employee’s speech more substantially involves matters of public concern.” Id. (quoting Connick, 461 U.S. at 152) (cleaned up). With these considerations in mind, the Court concluded:

the employer’s side of the Pickering scale is entirely empty: Respondents do not assert, and cannot demonstrate, any government interest that tips the balance in their favor. There is no evidence, for example, that Lane’s testimony at Schmitz’ trials was false or erroneous or that Lane unnecessarily disclosed any sensitive, confidential, or privileged information while testifying. In these circumstances, we conclude that Lane’s speech is entitled to protection under the First Amendment. The Eleventh Circuit erred in holding otherwise and dismissing Lane’s claim of retaliation on that basis.

Id. (footnote omitted). Notwithstanding its holding that the Eleventh Circuit had erred in concluding that the plaintiff’s speech was not constitutionally protected, the Court affirmed the lower court’s decision dismissing the claim for monetary relief against the college president on the alternative ground of qualified immunity and remanded the case for further proceedings on the remaining claims. Id. at 246.

March argues that Lane provides strong support for his claim that his cooperation with Agent Yerges' investigation was constitutionally protected. This case differs from Lane in several respects, however. First, as noted, the Court did not address whether the plaintiff was a policymaker, although based on his job title—program director—it would appear likely he was. In any event, the Court analyzed the case under Pickering without even discussing the Elrod-Branti corollary. This is significant because March held a quintessential policymaking position. For this reason, he would have less protection under the First Amendment than a non-policymaker. Also, unlike Lane, March's speech was critical of his direct supervisors, not someone who worked under his supervision. He essentially accused a majority of the Board of engaging in public corruption, something even more serious than accusing the governor of "an arbitrary and capricious act allowing him to take the protected property rights of plaintiffs without due process." Hagan, 867 F.3d at 828–29. Accusing one's supervisors of criminal conduct would make working together effectively and efficiently to fulfill their responsibilities to the public difficult. Thus, unlike Lane, the employer's side of the Pickering scale is not empty.

The most significant distinction between this case and Lane lies in the fact that in this case, March could have helped Wolff and the Board itself avoid or at least minimize the resulting damage and disruption that the criminal investigation brought about. In Lane, the plaintiff had ordered an audit to address financial difficulties the program was experiencing before he arrived and learned that a state representative on the program's payroll had not been showing up to work. 573 U.S. at 232. After the plaintiff fired the state representative, an FBI investigation led to charges against her of mail fraud and theft from a program receiving federal funds which, in turn, led to a 30-month prison sentence and restitution and forfeiture payments of $177,251.82. Id. at 232–33. It was the plaintiff's testimony in the criminal proceeding against the state representative that he claimed led to his termination. There was no suggestion that the plaintiff had taken or failed to take any action that led to the criminal conduct investigated. His actions had merely uncovered a crime that had already been committed.

In this case, by contrast, the crime Wolff was accused of committing—submitting a bid for a Town project on behalf of his company—could have been informally resolved had March notified Wolff and the other Board members of the risk that he was in violation of § 946.13(1)(a) and that it was not enough for Wolff to simply abstain from voting on the matter. One of March’s duties, after all, was to “[m]aintain knowledge of County, State, and Federal legislation affecting [the] Town.” Dkt. No. 26-1 at 10. The fact that March reported the alleged crime to Agent Yerges several months later, even before payment was made, clearly shows he viewed Wolff’s submitting a bid on behalf of his company as a crime. Yet, he said nothing to Wolff or the other Board members when the matter came before the Board for a vote. Instead, he stood by as Gehring moved for approval of the bid, even though the same statute provided that any such contract was void and the Town could incur no liability on it. Wis. Stat. § 946.13(3). This and other evidence, much of it acquired after March’s termination, such as Agent Yerges’ reports of interviews and March’s email exchanges with Gehring, supports Wolff’s contention that March was working with Gehring in opposition to the Wolff-led faction of the Board.

The court concludes from the foregoing that March’s alleged speech was not constitutionally protected, given his policymaking position. This is not to deny that “[e]xposing governmental inefficiency and misconduct is a matter of considerable significance.” Garcetti, 547 U.S. at 425. Many states, including Wisconsin, have enacted whistle-blower protection laws “to protect employees from retaliation and encourage disclosure of certain information.” Hutson v. State of Wis. Pers. Comm’n, 2003 WI 97, ¶ 37, 263 Wis. 2d 612, 633, 665 N.W.2d 212, 222 (citing Wis. Stat. § 230.01(2)). But March did not bring his action under Wisconsin statutory law. Instead, he brought his action under the First Amendment relying upon the Court’s analysis in Pickering. The Court of Appeals has held, however, that “under the ‘policy-maker corollary to the Pickering analysis, the First Amendment does not prohibit the discharge of a policy-making employee when that individual has engaged in speech on a matter of public concern in a manner that is critical of superiors or their stated policies.’” Hagan, 867 F.3d at 826 (quoting Kiddy-Brown, 408 F.3d at 358). By his own admission, March engaged in speech on a matter of public concern in a manner critical of his superiors. Given his policymaking role, his speech was not protected. His First Amendment retaliation claim therefore fails.

3. Qualified Immunity of Individual Defendants

Although the answer filed on behalf of all Defendants asserted the affirmative defense of qualified immunity, only Wolff in the brief in support of his separately filed motion for summary judgment presents an argument for qualified immunity. Nevertheless, under Rule 56(f), a court can decide any ground not raised by the parties as long as the parties had the opportunity to brief the issue. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f). Since March briefed the issue for one of the individual defendants and the analysis is the same for each, the court will proceed to decide whether each of the individual defendants is entitled to qualified immunity as an alternative ground for summary judgment in their favor.

“The doctrine of qualified immunity protects government officials ‘from liability for civil damages insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known.’” Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S. 223, 231 (2009) (quoting Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 818 (1982)). “Qualified immunity balances two important interests—the need to hold public officials accountable when they exercise power irresponsibly and the need to shield officials from harassment, distraction, and liability when they perform their duties reasonably.” Id. “The defense provides ample room for mistaken judgments and protects all but the plainly incompetent and those who knowingly violate the law.” Green v. Newport, 868 F.3d 629, 639 (7th Cir. 2017) (cleaned up); see also Kemp v. Liebel, 877 F.3d 346, 350–51 (7th Cir. 2017).

A government official is protected by qualified immunity unless the plaintiff shows: “(1) that the official violated a statutory or constitutional right, and (2) that the right was ‘clearly established’ at the time of the challenged conduct.” Ashcroft v. al-Kidd, 563 U.S. 731, 735 (2011) (quoting Harlow, 457 U.S. at 818). The rule that a government official cannot be personally liable unless the right the official is accused of violating is clearly established is basic to the essential role of the doctrine of qualified immunity. For it is fundamentally unfair to impose liability on a government official for conduct he reasonably believed he was entitled, if not required, to undertake. Fear of incurring such liability could also unreasonably deter a public officer in carrying out the duties of his office. It is for this reason that qualified immunity shields an officer from suit when making a decision that, though now found to be constitutionally deficient, was not clearly established to be so at the time. Brosseau v. Haugen, 543 U.S. 194, 198 (2004) (“Because the focus is on whether the officer had fair notice that her conduct was unlawful, reasonableness is judged against the backdrop of the law at the time of the conduct. If the law at that time did not clearly establish that the officer’s conduct would violate the Constitution, the officer should not be subject to liability or, indeed, even the burdens of litigation.”).

“To be clearly established, a right must be sufficiently clear that every reasonable official would have understood that what he is doing violates that right.” Reichle v. Howards, 566 U.S. 658, 664 (2012) (cleaned up). “In other words, ‘existing precedent must have placed the statutory or constitutional question beyond debate.”” Id. (quoting al-Kidd, 563 U.S. at 741). In assessing whether the unconstitutionality of the conduct of an official was clearly established at the time, the Court has repeatedly cautioned lower courts against “defin[ing] clearly established law at a high level of generality.” al-Kidd, 563 U.S. at 742 (citing Brosseau, 543 U.S. at 198–99). “This is not to say that an official action is protected by qualified immunity unless the very action in question has previously been held unlawful, but it is to say that in the light of pre-existing law the unlawfulness must be apparent.” Wilson v. Layne, 526 U.S. 603, 615 (1999) (citations omitted).

Based on the analysis above, the court concludes as an alternative ground for summary judgment in favor of the individual defendants that they are entitled to qualified immunity on March’s First Amendment retaliation claim because whatever constitutional protection March had was not clearly established. March argues in opposition that the law regarding his free speech rights was “well settled” at the time the individual defendants voted to terminate his contract with the Town. Dkt. No. 76 at 13. In support of his argument, March cites several cases which rejected the defense of qualified immunity by defendants alleged to have terminated the employment of government employees who reported corrupt or illegal practices. In Gorman v. Robinson, for example, the court rejected the defense of qualified immunity by the defendants in a civil rights lawsuit brought by an employee of the Chicago Housing Authority (CHA) who alleged that he had been discharged for his cooperation with FBI investigations of employee corruption at the CHA. 977 F.2d 350, 352 (7th Cir. 1992). But the plaintiff in Gorman was an assistant purchasing agent, which would not seem to be a policymaking position. More importantly, there was no discussion of the policymaker corollary to the Elrod-Branti line of cases. The same is true of other cases March cites in support of his contention that the law protecting him from termination for cooperating in a criminal investigation of his superiors was well established. They involve plaintiffs who seemingly do not occupy policymaking positions and contain no discussion of the Elrod-Branti corollary. See Kristofek v. Vill. of Orland Heights, 832 F.3d 785, 790 (7th Cir. 2016) (part-time village police officer); Hobgood v. Ill. Gaming Bd., 731 F.3d 635, 637 (7th Cir. 2013) (senior special agent for the investigations division of Gaming Board); Valentino v. Vill. of S. Chi. Heights, 575 F.3d 664, 669 (7th Cir. 2009) (plaintiff began working as part-time secretary in Village's Building Department and later transferred to water department where she performed various administrative tasks); Spieglia v. Hull, 371 F.3d 928, 932 (7th Cir. 2004) (correctional officer).

March also cites Lane as support for his contention that the law governing this case was clearly established. “[I]n Lane,” he contends, “the U.S. Supreme Court made it clear that the key considerations in determining whether March’s speech was protected are the content of his speech and the fact that it was provided to someone other than his employer.” Dkt. No. 76 at 13 (citing Lane, 573 U.S. at 241). “Certainly, after the Lane decision,” March argues, “no reasonable public official would believe they could lawfully retaliate against March for providing evidence to a law enforcement official at the law enforcement official’s request.” Id. at 14.

But Lane, like the other cases March cites, does not contain any discussion of the Elrod-Branti corollary that, as the court explained in Hagan, provides an exception that “bars plaintiffs from pursuing their First Amendment retaliation claim.” 867 F.3d at 825. For this reason and because of the significant factual distinctions between this case and Lane described above, the court concludes that, even if it erred in concluding that March’s speech/conduct was not constitutionally protected, the law was not so clearly established as to deprive the individual defendants of the qualified immunity the law provides. For this reason, as well, the individual defendants are entitled to summary judgment on March’s First Amendment claim against them.

4. March's Due Process Claim Fails as a Matter of Law

March's Fourteenth Amendment claim likewise cannot survive summary judgment. March argues that although a supermajority of the Board could terminate him "without cause," he was nonetheless entitled to certain procedural safeguards before the Board could terminate him. And because those procedural safeguards were not provided, March asserts that his due process claim must be heard by a jury. Defendants disagree, asserting that March held no property interest in his employment and therefore cannot maintain a due process claim. Defendants are correct; March's due process claim must be dismissed.

The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment forbids a state from depriving "any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1. "An essential component of a procedural due process claim is a protected property or liberty interest." Minch v. City of Chicago, 486 F.3d 294, 302 (7th Cir. 2007) (citing other sources). Liberty is not at issue here as March proceeds under a purported property interest. "To demonstrate a procedural due process violation of a property right, the plaintiff must establish that there is '(1) a cognizable property interest; (2) a deprivation of that property interest; and (3) a denial of due process.'" Khan v. Bland, 630 F.3d 519, 527 (7th Cir. 2010) (quoting Hudson v. City of Chicago, 374 F.3d 554, 559 (7th Cir. 2004)).

Here, it is clear that March is unable to establish the first element: a cognizable property interest. "[W]hether a particular job action against a public employee implicates a constitutionally protected property interest is a question of law." Cole v. Milwaukee Area Tech. Coll. Dist., 634 F.3d 901, 904 (7th Cir. 2011) (citing another source). "In the employment context, a plaintiff generally is required to show that the terms of his employment provide for termination only for cause or otherwise evince mutually explicit understandings of continued employment." Id.

(internal quotation marks and citations omitted). In Wisconsin, “courts have generally resolved the matter . . . based on whether the employment is at-will or for cause.” Fittshur v. Vill. of Menomonee Falls, 31 F.3d 1401, 1405 (7th Cir. 1994) (citing another source); see also Bd. of Regents v. Roth, 408 U.S. 564, 577 (1972) (holding that the existence of a substantive property interest in public employment is ordinarily a question of state law). “Employment which can be terminated only ‘for cause’ receives due process protections;” employment “at-will” does not. Cole, 634 F.3d at 904 (citing Beischel v. Stone Bank Sch. Dist., 362 F.3d 430, 436 (7th Cir. 2004)).

It is clear that the terms of March’s employment agreement did not create a property interest. By the terms of his agreement, March was employed for “an indefinite term” and he was “subject to removal at any time by two-thirds vote” of the Board, so long as, if without cause, he received 30 days’ notice and, after the first three years, he received six additional months’ salary and family health insurance coverage as severance compensation together with any accrued benefits at the time of termination. Dkt. No. 26-1 at 2–3. Wisconsin Statutes, which could confer a property interest, do not do so here. Beischel, 362 F.3d at 436 (citing Larson v. City of Tomah, 193 Wis. 2d 225, 532 N.W.2d 726 (1995); Schultz v. Baumgart, 738 F.2d 231 (7th Cir. 1984)). Section 17.13(1) of the Wisconsin Statutes provides that, in the absence of a contract, appointed town officials can be terminated “by the officer or body that appointed him or her, at pleasure.” Where, like here, a body is the decision maker, “[r]emoval . . . shall be by a majority vote of all the members thereof.” Wis. Stat. § 17.13(1).

March argues that when read in conjunction with Wisconsin’s Open Meetings Law, Wis. Stat. § 19.85, his contract created a property interest entitled to due process protection. The Open Meetings Law, as a general matter, requires that government business be conducted in public. Wis. Stat. § 19.81(2). Section 19.85(1) provides that “[a] closed session may be held” for the purpose of “considering dismissal . . . of any public employee . . . and the taking of formal action on any such matter; provided that the . . . public employee . . . is given actual notice of any evidentiary hearing which may be held prior to final action being taken and of any meeting at which final action may be taken.” Wis. Stat. § 19.85(1). The statute goes on to state, “[t]he notice shall contain a statement that the [public employee] has the right to demand that the evidentiary hearing or meeting be held in open session.” § 19.85(1)(b). March argues that Wis. Stat. § 19.85 creates a property interest because it gives a public employee the right to request that a meeting at which final action be taken be held in open session, thereby allowing the public to hear and comment on the termination decision.

March’s argument has facial appeal, but a careful reading of § 19.85 reveals that it does not create a property interest. The statute envisions an evidentiary hearing when termination of a public employee is for cause. But when termination is not for cause, there is no need for an evidentiary hearing; there is no cause the Board is required to prove. Here, the Board was contractually entitled to terminate March’s contract without cause by two-thirds vote of the Board, as long as he was paid the required severance in salary and benefits. Since the Board elected to terminate March’s contract without cause and agreed to award him the required severance, there was no need for or right to an evidentiary hearing. Moreover, the final action terminating March’s employment was taken in open session after the closed session ended. Dkt. No. 79-16 at 5.

March makes a further argument that the Board was required to provide notice that it was considering his dismissal even if it was to be without cause. He contends that had such notice been provided, he would have requested his dismissal be discussed in open session, which would have required the members to openly discuss their reasons for terminating his contract in his presence and that of the citizenry. Had that occurred, March contends that at least English would have voted differently. Dkt. No. 110 at 25.

In fact, it was no mystery that the Board intended to consider termination of March's contract at the May 2, 2023 Board meeting. The agenda for the meeting, like the April 13, 2023 meeting, included as an item: “[c]onferring with legal counsel for the governmental body who is rendering oral or written advice concerning strategy to be adopted by the body with respect to litigation in which it is or is likely to become involved,’ to wit: to discuss the performance of the Town Administrator, confer with special counsel regarding the Town’s rights and responsibilities under the employment agreement with the Town Administrator, review the Town’s legal position in relation to the Administrator’s counsel’s correspondence and otherwise discuss the Town Board’s legal position in relation to same.” Dkt. No. 79-13 at 2. Even if this was not sufficient to comply with § 19.85(1)(b), it is difficult to see how that would support a due process claim. It has long been established “that procedural rights are not rights of liberty or property within the meaning of the due process clause.” Wikberg v. Reich, 21 F.3d 188, 190 (7th Cir. 1994); see also Lim v. Cent. DuPage Hosp., 871 F.2d 644, 648 (7th Cir. 1989) (“[A] contract that creates merely a right to procedure does not create a property right within the meaning of the due process clause.”). Indeed, “[i]n order to give rise to a constitutionally protected property interest, a statute or ordinance must go beyond mere procedural guarantees to provide some substantive criteria limiting the state’s discretion—as can be found, for example, in a requirement that employees be fired only ‘for cause.’” Jones v. City of Gary, 57 F.3d 1435, 1440 (7th Cir. 1995) (quoting another source). Because § 19.85 provides no substantive criteria limiting the state’s discretion to terminate public employees, it did not entitle March to his job as Administrator. And thus, March can assert no property interest. Accordingly, March's Fourteenth Amendment due process claim fails as a matter of law.

B. March's Motion for Summary Judgment on Wolff's Counterclaim

In his counterclaim against March, Wolff alleges that March violated his First Amendment rights by retaliating against him for speaking out against March. Wolff also alleges that March treated him differently from those similarly situated and March's actions were "motivated by a strong personal animus against [Wolff] and out of a spiteful effort to 'get' [Wolff] for reasons wholly unrelated to any legitimate state or municipal interest," in violation of Wolff's Fourteenth Amendment right to equal protection of the law. Dkt. No. 26 ¶¶ 160–61. March argues in his motion for summary judgment that both of Wolff's claims fail as a matter of law. He also asserts the defense of qualified immunity.

1. Wolff's § 1983 Claim for First Amendment Retaliation

To prevail on a claim under § 1983, a plaintiff must establish the violation of a right secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States and, in addition, show that the alleged deprivation was committed by a person acting under color of state law. West v. Atkins, 487 U.S. 42, 48 (1988). Wolff claims that March acted under color of state law to deprive him of his rights under the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. Because March was not Wolff's employer or supervisor, Wolff's First Amendment claim against March is not the same as March's claim against Wolff. To prove a First Amendment retaliation claim outside the employment context, a plaintiff must ultimately show that (1) he engaged in activity protected by the First Amendment; (2) the defendant, in his capacity as a government official, subjected the plaintiff to a deprivation that would likely deter First Amendment activity in the future; and (3) the First Amendment activity was a but-for cause of the defendants' decision to take the retaliatory action.

Hartman v. Moore, 547 U.S. 250, 256 (2006); Bridges v. Gilbert, 557 F.3d 541, 546 (7th Cir. 2009).

Wolff contends that he engaged in constitutionally protected speech when, over the course of the years 2018 and continuing into 2021, he made public statements calling for March to be fired. He argues that the evidence is sufficient for a jury to find that March retaliated against him by failing to bring to his attention, or the Board's, the fact that his bid on behalf of Lake Shore for the Champion Pond Project might constitute a violation of Wis. Stat. § 946.13(1)(a), and thereby setting him up for a criminal investigation. Instead of bringing the matter to the Board's attention, Wolff argues that March reported the alleged violation to Agent Yerges in the hope that Wolff would be prosecuted and ultimately removed from the Board. Wolff contends that March's conduct caused him to be subjected to a wide-ranging criminal investigation, unreasonable searches of his home and businesses and seizure of his properties, and a criminal prosecution, resulting in emotional distress, loss of reputation, humiliation, and embarrassment, as well as substantial attorneys' fees.

The first question that arises is whether Wolff's political discourse is constitutionally protected in the same sense as that of an unelected citizen or non-policymaker government employee. Wolff is an elected official and thus does not stand in the shoes of a mere citizen against the power of the government. Instead, Wolff, as an elected official, is a person who wields such power, at least as far as March is concerned. As this court noted in a similar case, "neither the First Amendment, nor § 1983, was intended to shield politicians from the political process itself. . . . As the fictional Mr. Dooley observed long ago, 'Politics ain't beanbag.'" Footit v. Van De Hey, No. 04-C-459, 2005 WL 1563334, at *4 (E.D. Wis. June 29, 2005). Other courts have reached similar results, as this court explained in Footit.

In Romero-Barcelo v. Hernandez-Agosto, for example, the former governor of Puerto Rico, having lost his bid for re-election, brought a § 1983 suit against elected members of the Puerto Rico Senate from the opposing political party, alleging that they violated his First Amendment rights by “rigging” legislative hearings to make it appear that he was involved in illegal activity and continuously labeling him as an assassin or murderer in public statements to the press, and on radio and television, in an effort to undermine his popularity with the electorate. 75 F.3d 23, 26–28 (1st Cir. 1996). The First Circuit affirmed the district court’s dismissal of the action on the ground that the defendants enjoyed absolute legislative immunity for statements made and actions taken in the course of the legislative hearings. Id. at 32. As to claims not barred by legislative immunity, the court upheld the district court’s finding that there was “no First Amendment protection for ‘a politician whose rights to freedom of speech, freedom of association, and freedom to disassociate [oneself] from unpopular views have been injured by other politicians seeking to undermine his credibility within his own party and with the electorate.’” Id. at 34 (alteration in original) (quoting Barcelo v. Agosto, 876 F. Supp. 1332, 1348 (D.P.R. 1995)).

Likewise, in Camacho v. Brandon, the Second Circuit held that the termination of a City Council staffer because of the exercise of First Amendment rights by the opposition member with whom the staffer had a close professional and personal relationship was not actionable under § 1983 as a retaliatory discharge. 317 F.3d 153, 163 (2d Cir. 2003). Although the court found that the staffer had standing to assert the First Amendment rights of the council member who was allegedly retaliated against, it rejected the plaintiff’s claim that such retaliation was actionable. Id. at 160, 163. In First Amendment retaliation cases, the court held, “there generally is no First Amendment violation when the plaintiff is a policymaker.” Id. at 161. “Indeed, to hold otherwise,” the court noted, “would subject to litigation all manners and degrees of politically motivated, retaliatory conduct directed at public officials.” Id. at 162.

As in Footit, the same principle applies here. As an elected public official, Wolff is not entitled to sue his political opponent just because he thinks his motivation for accusing him of misconduct was not pure. While Wolff is free to sue March in state court for libel or slander if March intentionally or recklessly defamed him, that is not what Wolff has claimed here. His claim is that March was trying to politically harm him because he opposed Wolff’s policies. That may be true, but because Wolff is a policymaker, the motivation of his political opponents is irrelevant. As this court noted in Footit, this is not to say that government officials, such as Wolff, have forfeited their First Amendment right to speak out on issues of public concern. See Bond v. Floyd, 385 U.S. 116, 135–36 (1966) (“The manifest function of the First Amendment in a representative government requires that legislators be given the widest latitude to express their views on issues of policy.”). But as a policy-making official, Wolff’s vindication against his opponents, absent proof of libel or slander, must be found at the ballot box, not in the courts.

Wolff’s claim against March also fails because March did not, under color of law, take material adverse action against him. To support a First Amendment retaliation claim, the adverse action must be “material;” that is, it must “deter a person of ordinary firmness from exercising First Amendment activity in the future.” Bridges, 557 F.3d at 555; see also Houston Cnty. Coll. Sys. v. Wilson, 595 U.S. 468, 479 (2022). The materiality inquiry takes special consideration of whether the party complaining of retaliation is an elected official because our country “expect[s] elected representatives to shoulder a degree of criticism about their public service from their constituents and their peers—and to continue exercising their free speech rights when the criticism comes.” Wilson, 595 U.S. at 478; see also Monitor Patriot Co. v. Roy, 401 U.S. 265, 277 (1971)

(holding that even a false charge of criminal conduct against an official or candidate is constitutionally protected unless it is made with knowledge of its falsehood or with reckless disregard of whether it was false). More to the point, “[w]hen individuals ‘consent to be a candidate for a public office conferred by the election of the people,’ they necessarily ‘pu[t] [their] character in issue, so far as it may respect [their] fitness and qualifications for the office.’” Wilson, 595 U.S. at 478 (alterations in original) (quoting White v. Nicholls, 3 How. 266, 290 (1845)). Even being accused of a crime is not out of the ordinary in the world of politics, as the current President of the country could attest. See also Footit, 2005 WL 1563334, at *4 (“But Footit is hardly the first politician to be accused of a crime by a political opponent.”).

Though March could have warned Wolff and the Board that Wolff’s bid on the Champion Pond Project might violate § 946.13, assuming March realized it himself at the time, Wolff was ultimately responsible for his own conduct. March was not legally responsible for the DCI investigation or resulting criminal charges. Gehring filed the complaint, Agent Yerges investigated, and the state Attorney General’s office prosecuted the matter. While March also provided Agent Yerges information, it was not clear he was acting under color of law when he did so. See Polk Cnty. v. Dodson, 454 U.S. 312, 324 (1981) (holding a public defender representing an indigent defendant did not act under color of state law). In any event, at each step, an independent actor exercised his own judgment and concluded to continue forward. Findings of probable cause were made by judicial officers to support both the issuance of the search warrant authorizing the search of Wolff’s properties and the criminal charge on which he was prosecuted. See Hartman, 547 U.S. at 265–66 (holding a plaintiff in a retaliatory-prosecution case must plead and show the absence of probable cause for pressing underlying criminal charge). More to the point, Wolff signed off on the Champion Pond quote before engaging March or any other Town official. Because the actus reus under Wis. Stat. § 946.13(1)(a) includes “bid[ing] for . . . a contract in which the officer or employee has a private pecuniary interest,” Wolff subjected himself to future investigation and prosecution before March even was aware of his conduct. For this reason, as well, the court will grant March’s motion for summary judgment and dismiss Wolff’s First Amendment retaliation claim.

Alternatively, the court concludes that March is entitled to qualified immunity as to Wolff’s First Amendment retaliation claim. Whether March’s silence in the face of Wolff’s bid on the Champion Pond Project was part of a plan to set Wolff up for criminal prosecution or simply an oversight not unlike that of the entire Town staff and Board, Wolff has cited no authority that would support the conclusion that such silence could violate clearly established federal law and thereby subject March to monetary liability. For this reason, as well, March is entitled to summary judgment on Wolff’s First Amendment claim against him.

2. Fourteenth Amendment Class of One Claim

A plaintiff seeking to bring an equal protection claim as a “class of one” must show (1) he “has been intentionally treated differently from others similarly situated,” and (2) “that there is no rational basis for the difference in treatment.” Vill. of Willowbrook v. Olech, 528 U.S. 562, 564 (2000) (per curiam); accord McDonald v. Vill. of Winnetka, 371 F.3d 992, 1001 (7th Cir. 2004). March argues that Wolff’s claim is foreclosed by Engquist v. Oregon Department of Agriculture, wherein the Supreme Court held that “a ‘class-of-one’ theory of equal protection has no place in the public employment context.” 553 U.S. 591, 594 (2008). March also argues that Wolff has failed to produce any evidence from which a reasonable jury could find he was treated differently from other similarly situated individuals. The court need not decide whether Wolff has sufficient evidence from which a reasonable jury could find he was intentionally treated differently from other similarly situated individuals. For Engquist makes clear that his class of one equal protection claims fails.

In Engquist, the Court recognized that “there are some forms of state action . . . which by their nature involve discretionary decisionmaking based on a vast array of subjective, individualized assessments.” 553 U.S. at 603. In those type of cases, the Court noted, “the rule that people should be ‘treated alike, under like circumstances and conditions’ is not violated when one person is treated differently from others, because treating like individuals differently is an accepted consequence of the discretion granted.” Id. The Court held that allowing a challenge based on the arbitrary singling out of a particular person in such situations “would undermine the very discretion that such state officials are entrusted to exercise.” Id.

The Court then concluded that this principle “applies most clearly in the employment context, for employment decisions are quite often subjective and individualized, resting on a wide array of factors that are difficult to articulate and quantify.” Id. at 604. “The close relationship between the employer and employee, and the varied needs and interests involved in the employment context, mean that considerations such as concerns over personality conflicts that would be unreasonable as grounds for ‘arm’s-length’ government decisions (e.g., zoning, licensing) may well justify different treatment of a public employee.” Id. And “unlike the context of arm’s-length regulation, such as in Olech, treating seemingly similarly situated individuals differently in the employment context is par for the course.” Id. In summary, the Court concluded:

the class-of-one theory of equal protection—which presupposes that like individuals should be treated alike, and that to treat them differently is to classify them in a way that must survive at least rationality review—is simply a poor fit in the public employment context. To treat employees differently is not to classify them in a way that raises equal protection concerns. Rather, it is simply to exercise the broad discretion that typically characterizes the employer-employee relationship. A challenge that one has been treated individually in this context, instead of like everyone else, is a challenge to the underlying nature of the government action.

Id. at 605.

In light of Engquist, Wolff's "class of one" equal protection claim must fail. This theory of liability simply has no application and is not cognizable in the public employment context. Accordingly, summary judgment will be granted, and Wolff's equal protection claim will be dismissed.

CONCLUSION

For the above reasons, Defendants' motions for summary judgment on March's claims against them (Dkt. Nos. 42 & 83) are GRANTED. March's motion for summary judgment on Wolff's counterclaims against him (Dkt. No. 81) is likewise GRANTED. The action is therefore dismissed, and the Clerk is directed to enter judgment accordingly.

SO ORDERED at Green Bay, Wisconsin this 8th day of April, 2025.

_____
William C. Griesbach
United States District Judge

United States District Court
EASTERN DISTRICT OF WISCONSIN

JAMES MARCH,

Plaintiff,

v.

JUDGMENT IN A CIVIL CASE

Case No. 23-C-656

TOWN OF GRAND CHUTE, RONALD WOLFF,
JASON VAN EPEREN, and JEFFREY INGS,

Defendants.

---

- Jury Verdict. This action came before the Court for a trial by jury. The issues have been tried and the jury has rendered its verdict
- Decision by Court. This action came before the Court for consideration.

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that Plaintiff takes nothing, and this action is DISMISSED.

Approved: s/ William C. Griesbach
WILLIAM C. GRIESBACH
United States District Judge

Dated: April 9, 2025

GINA M. COLLETTI
Clerk of Court

s/ Kyle W. Frederickson
(By) Deputy Clerk