WELCOME TO GEORGETOWN LAW

Tradition. Innovation. A superb faculty. A curriculum unmatched in breadth and depth. And all of this just steps away from the Capitol and Supreme Court. At Georgetown, you learn the law in the place where laws are made.

Wherever your passion for the law takes you—practicing at a global law firm, tackling juvenile justice reform, running for public office—Georgetown Law provides you with a pathway to a career you will love.

“Every week, every day—sometimes in a matter of hours—new legal issues take prominence in the headlines and in the nation’s consciousness, issues that require clearheaded, principled legal discourse. Our faculty, alumni and students are taking center stage. The same unique characteristics that have always attracted the most talented students to Georgetown Law—academic rigor, Washington, D.C., location, commitment to social justice—are the same qualities that are propelling members of our community to the forefront today. I am proud that we can provide Georgetown Law students with the opportunity to be where the action is, not just geographically but at the highest professional and intellectual levels.”

— William M. Treanor, Dean of Georgetown Law

Learning the Law Where Laws Are Made

Take a few short steps from the Georgetown Law campus, and you'll find yourself looking up at a familiar sight—the U.S. Capitol. Walk a few minutes more, and you'll be standing in front of the U.S. Supreme Court.

At Georgetown, you will study the dynamic processes of the law in a real-world laboratory. Our students have an unparalleled vantage point—just minutes away from the Congress that enacts laws, the Supreme Court that interprets them, and the executive agencies that enforce them.

We are, quite simply, a place like no other. Consider the breadth and scope of knowledge and the level of experience represented in the Georgetown Law faculty. Our professors serve in key federal government posts, provide expert testimony for congressional committees, and help shape national policy. You'll frequently see them interviewed on national television and quoted in major newspapers.

Trial Run

Before most lawyers present oral arguments before the U.S. Supreme Court, they first make a stop at Georgetown Law.

At our Supreme Court Institute (SCI) Moot Court, lawyers about to appear before the Court have the opportunity to hone their arguments beforehand. They receive critiques from a panel of prominent Supreme Court practitioners, many from leading D.C. law firms.

A photograph of a man with a shaved head and a goatee, wearing a blue blazer over a plaid shirt, engaged in conversation with a woman whose back is to the camera. She has long dark hair and is wearing a red top. They are outdoors, with a blurred background of trees and a building.

“The best way to describe the advantage afforded by Georgetown Law’s Supreme Court Institute is “exclusive access to a coming attraction.” The Institute moots an unparalleled number of Supreme Court cases prior to their presentation at the Supreme Court. Students are invited to watch as experienced Supreme Court litigators present, defend, and refine their arguments. This immersive experience provides Georgetown Law students with a greater understanding of the Supreme Court than that which could be gained through the study of historical cases alone.”

— Michael Daniels, JD’17, LLM’18

OUR OWN THINK TANKS

19

Centers and Institutes

Taking full advantage of our D.C. location, Georgetown Law's 19 Centers and Institutes are "think tanks/do tanks" right here on campus. Many are multidisciplinary, working in collaboration with Georgetown University's preeminent graduate and professional schools.

Clinics

Externships

170

Experiential courses offered
per year

Because of the scope of our curriculum, you are guaranteed a seat in an experiential course during every upperclass semester. We offer four types of experiential courses, each with distinct benefits:

Clinics

Our 18 clinics provide you with a unique opportunity to advise or represent actual clients, both here in D.C. and around the world, while simultaneously receiving intensive supervision and feedback from faculty.

Practicums

In practicum courses, you work on projects or cases under the direction of a supervising attorney, while studying law in action in an associated seminar. These courses give you a great opportunity to become a subject matter expert, cultivate your legal skills, and begin to develop a professional identity. They also enable you to build networks that can be tapped for future internships and jobs. You can choose from more than 30 practicum courses in areas including public policy, human rights, environmental law, business law, regulatory law, health law, and more.

Externships

By integrating classroom work with real-world work experience, our semester-long externships give you the opportunity to see law in action while gaining a deeper understanding of how legal practice happens. More than 400 of our J.D. students participate in externships each year.

Simulations

In our simulation courses, you step into the lawyer's role in a wide range of hypothetical scenarios. Our renowned National Security Law simulation, for example, puts you in the middle of a national security crisis—such as a pandemic disease outbreak or cyber attack—and requires you to respond in real time.

“I did a fall externship at the Public Defender Service for D.C. In the spring, I went on to participate in the Corporate Legal Department Practicum, in which I attended a seminar taught by two law firm partners focused on the role of in-house lawyers and the challenges they face. This seminar was supplemented by an internship with the general counsel of a start-up incubator called 1776. I learned so much from both of these very different experiences. Putting the more theoretical aspects of law I learned during my first year of law school to practice was so rewarding.”

An Unparalleled Edge in Your Career Path

From Top 100 law firms to the Justice Department to NGOs, Georgetown students are in high demand—both for summer jobs and for full-time employment after graduation. Employers know that our students are ready for practice on Day 1.

We offer one of the most extensive on-campus law firm recruiting programs in the nation. Combined with our other private sector, government and public interest interview programs, we provide more than 7,000 interview opportunities for our students each year.

Finding Your Calling

Georgetown is among just a few law schools in the country that provides a dedicated public interest career center: our Office of Public Interest and Community Service (OPICS).

As a student here you can consult our OPICS team about government and public interest placements, career planning, networking and recruiting opportunities, and much more. Because Washington, D.C. is the heart of the nation's public interest community, you'll have access to a vast array of opportunities with non-profit organizations and government agencies.

Public Interest Fellows Program

All incoming J.D. students are eligible to apply to the Public Interest Fellows Program. As a fellow, you receive enhanced public interest academic, career, and community support, including alumni mentorship and specialized career counseling.

Delaney Post-Graduate Residency Program

Launched in 2016, the Delaney Post-Graduate Residency Program is a training and mentoring program for graduates participating in year-long fellowships in the public sector. This program was made possible through a generous gift from April McClain-Delaney (L'89) and Rep. John Delaney (L'88).

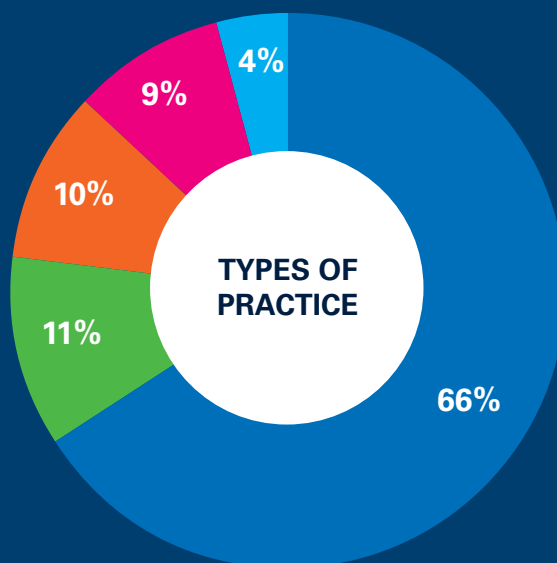

“The [Blume] Public Interest Law Scholars program connected me with faculty and practitioner mentors in my fields of interest, and introduced me to like-minded incoming and upperclass students before my 1L year had even begun. During externship and volunteer experiences in the time since, I have met former PILS working in offices across the country. I know this is a network of friends and mentors that will support me after graduation and into my career.”

“I came to Georgetown because of the school’s focus on public interest careers and the strength of its national security law program. I took several courses uniquely suited to my career goals—including a week-long national security crisis simulation—and, because I was in D.C., I was able to work at government agencies and local think tanks during the academic year. Those experiences, along with the mentorship of Georgetown’s incredible faculty members, have prepared me for a career in government service.”

Tailoring Your Own Course of Study

Georgetown Law offers a wider array of courses than any other law school—over 400 J.D. courses and seminars each year. In choosing your courses and other academic experiences—such as studying abroad—you have the flexibility to pursue a broad and diverse curriculum or a tailor-made program in one of our many specialty areas, including international, constitutional, tax, environmental, and health care law.

As an incoming 1L student, you can choose between two curricular options:

Curriculum A provides a thorough grounding in foundational subjects while enabling you to select from a diverse menu of six to seven elective courses in the spring semester, drawn from two major areas of law: legislative/administrative and international/comparative.

Curriculum B was developed to address three important changes in legal practice and theory: the emergence of the regulatory state; the overlap between the common law subjects of torts, contracts, and property; and the important influence of other disciplines such as economics, history, and philosophy.

A young man with short brown hair, wearing a light blue button-down shirt and grey trousers, is smiling broadly. He is standing outdoors in front of a building with large windows. The background is slightly blurred.

“D.C. is the center of the legal world. Internships at the FTC, on the Hill, or with the DOJ that are really tough to get during the summer are right at your fingertips during the academic year. You can take an administrative law class on a Monday morning and then walk five minutes over to the D.C. Circuit that afternoon to work on cutting-edge regulatory cases for your internship. Taking a class on Criminal Procedure? Why not stroll over to the Supreme Court and listen to the oral arguments for cases like Carpenter that are changing the legal landscape for future criminal defendants. Being a law student in D.C. provides you with access to legal resources no other city in America can provide.”

Global Law Scholars

Approximately 15-20 incoming J.D. students each year are selected for the prestigious Global Law Scholars program, which prepares students for transnational practice by combining language skills and cultural familiarity with rigorous and directed legal training. Students can also study for a semester at our Center for Transnational Legal Studies in London or through another semester abroad program. The Law Center also offers a joint degree with Institut d'Études Politiques de Paris (Sciences Po).

Business Law Scholars

The Business Law Scholars program is designed to help students gain extensive practical experience to better prepare for a career in corporate law, starting a business, or becoming a partner in a law practice. Through mentorship, participation in speakers series, business simulations and contests—including with the McDonough School of Business—and with guaranteed access to some of the more highly sought-after business-related courses, this cohort will develop vital business-related skills that will position students well for long-term success in business-related roles.

Technology Law & Policy Scholars

The Technology Law & Policy Scholars program gives students the opportunity to engage in rigorous academic work, to develop their technological skills, and to deepen their understanding of policy debates related to new and emerging technologies. Scholars will have the opportunity to work in a hands-on environment, pairing practical experience with a solid theoretical foundation.

“As a function of its size, Georgetown Law gave me the chance to pursue a number of diverse opportunities until I found my niche in the Black Law Students Association and the Georgetown Journal on Poverty Law and Policy.”

SMALL SCHOOL FEEL

100/30

More than 100 small seminars each semester with 30 or fewer students

95%

For the Class of 2018, 95% of Evening Program students secured law-related jobs

An Intimate Learning Environment

Your introduction to the small-school feel of Georgetown Law begins in the first year, with your small section class of about 33 students and an even smaller Legal Practice seminar of about 25 students. In your upperclass years, you can choose each semester from more than 100 small seminars, most of which enroll 30 or fewer students. Many of our students also pursue research and writing projects with individual professors.

Evening Program

Georgetown Law's J.D. Evening Program offers a unique opportunity to earn a degree from one of the top U.S. law schools without giving up your full-time job. You'll study with the same world-class faculty as full-time students, fully supported by the Law Center's career and academic support services. At the same time, you'll have the flexibility to complete your J.D. in three to four years, with class times that fit your working schedule.

Evening students earn the same degree as day students. They take the same required courses, including experiential education requirements; participate in the same extracurricular activities, from our top-rated journals to mock trial competitions; and are equally successful in securing career and clerkship opportunities.

All first-year evening students attend classes starting at 5:45 p.m. on weekday evenings. Upper-class students may take courses that meet after work, during the day, or a combination of both. Upper-class electives are also offered on weekends.

“As an evening student, I have the same opportunities as my full-time counterparts, with the added benefit of learning from the experiences of my classmates and professors. On more than one occasion, a professor paused their lecture to tell the class about their personal experience arguing a case before the Supreme Court. We don’t just learn from the book—we learn through the experience of our professors.”

WE'D LIKE TO MEET YOU!

We conduct information sessions and campus tours throughout the year. Information sessions are focused on giving applicants an overview of the admissions process at Georgetown Law. We encourage all interested applicants to attend. Please see our website for a schedule.

Applying to law school is the first step in a transformative journey. The Georgetown Law Admissions Office is ready to guide you as you begin planning your life as a legal professional.

Georgetown offers a unique set of advantages for our students. From the moment you enter your first law school class, no other school better prepares you for practice. By the time you don your purple hood at graduation, you will be ready to thrive in whatever career path you have chosen.

What sets Georgetown apart? First, it's our location in Washington, D.C., which gives our students unparalleled access to the top legal theorists and practitioners in the world.

As a pioneer and national leader in experiential education, Georgetown has developed top-ranked clinical programs that enable our students to apply theory to practice in representing actual clients—from victims of family violence to refugees in federal immigration court.

And with more than 120 full-time faculty, Georgetown offers the most comprehensive legal curriculum in the nation: more than 400 J.D. courses and seminars. Alongside those extensive resources, we provide a close-knit community and individualized support, grounded in the university's tradition of "care for the whole person."

We invite you to visit our campus, talk with our faculty and students, and explore our vibrant capital city. We look forward to meeting you.

APPLY

Georgetown Law's commitment to providing a personalized education begins with the admissions experience. Admissions at Georgetown is far more than a numbers game—we understand the importance of getting to know you by reading each and every part of your application.

We're here to answer any questions you may have about our school and our application process. Our goal is to build a vibrant, engaged, and passionate community at Georgetown, and we hope you will join us!

Who May Apply

Applicants who will possess a U.S. baccalaureate degree from an accredited college or university or the equivalent from a foreign institution prior to registration day are eligible for admission to Georgetown Law as candidates for the J.D. degree or any joint degree programs. Candidates may apply for admission to the Full-Time Division, the Part-Time/Evening Division, or "Both."

The American Bar Association requires that we advise applicants that, in addition to a bar examination, there are character, fitness, and other qualifications for admission to the bar in every U.S. jurisdiction.

Early Decision

The Early Decision process is designed for applicants who are certain that Georgetown Law is their first choice school. Offers of admission are binding through this process. Although candidates admitted under Early Decision are committed to attending Georgetown, and will not receive their financial aid information before their admissions decision, please be assured that you will be considered for merit scholarships and need-based financial aid in the same manner, and on the same timeline, as all other admitted students.

Regular Decision

The Admissions Committee reviews applications on a rolling basis as they are completed. We begin accepting applications on September 15. It is to your advantage to complete your application as early as possible in the admissions cycle.

Financing Your Legal Education

We are committed to ensuring that you can pursue a legal education regardless of your financial circumstances. In 2018-2019, 56 percent of our students received grants or scholarships.

The professionals in our Financial Aid office are here to guide you through all stages of the financial aid process. Our website contains detailed information about the types of assistance we offer, plus step-by-step instructions on how to apply. We encourage you to reach out to us directly to help answer any financial-related questions you may have.

Types of Financial Aid

Educational Loans and Work Study

The Federal Direct Loan Program is the primary source of financial aid for Georgetown Law students. Students may also be eligible for other federal and private student loans and federally funded work-study opportunities.

Dean's Tuition Grants

Dean's Tuition Grants are awarded to approximately one-third of the full-time entering class based on financial need.

Blume Public Interest Scholars

The Blume Scholars program provides financial and other support to selected students each year who demonstrate a commitment to spend most of their careers in public service.

Loan Repayment Assistance Program (LRAP)

Georgetown Law's loan repayment assistance program provides our graduates working in qualified public interest or government positions with assistance repaying their law school loans. Our LRAP was one of the first of its kind, and it remains among the strongest in the country.

Guaranteed Summer Public Interest Funding

The Equal Justice Foundation funding program guarantees summer funding to all 1L, 2L, and 3E Georgetown Law students who work for eligible public interest or government employers.
