Dear Rising Second-Year Students:

First of all, I hope that this letter finds you and your families happy, safe, and healthy. The first year of law school is challenging, and I am sure that the circumstances of this year have not made it any easier. Despite all that was presented to you this year, you made it through, and I want to congratulate you on the tremendous accomplishment of completing your 1L year. You have achieved a great deal, and I hope that you know the entire Georgetown community is proud of you!

Second, if you are reading this letter, you have decided to get involved with a journal next year. How exciting! I want to take this time to strongly encourage you to rank the American Criminal Law Review first or second as you finalize your preferences. ACLR is the nation’s premier criminal law journal, and is frequently cited and routinely used by judges, practitioners, professors, and students across the country. Our fantastic team of editors prepares three timely and compelling issues of ACLR each year, as well as our Annual Survey of White Collar Crime. Not only is ACLR well known nationwide, but it is also suitable for all forms of law practice—criminal law, corporate litigation, or public interest work—and it will provide you with a fun and meaningful journal experience that furthers your academic and professional goals.

Third, beyond those abstract benefits, I want to highlight a few practical advantages of ACLR membership:

- You are guaranteed a publication credit by the end of next year for your work on the Annual Survey of White Collar Crime. The Annual Survey is the definitive reference work for white collar practitioners in the United States. Each staff member assists in updating and writing new sections of the Annual Survey, which will put your name and work product on the desks of hundreds of judges and attorneys nationwide.

- You will have the opportunity to be published on Westlaw and fulfill your Note requirement by participating in our Featured Online Contributor Program (FOCP). Our ACLR Online platform allows us to accept contributions from selected “featured” contributors as well as any interested staff member.

- We are proud to be an entirely student-run journal that offers leadership opportunities to all 2L staff members. When you finish your first year with ACLR, you will graduate into an editorial or senior editorial position. This will give you the chance to specialize in a particular area of the editing process, and will allow you to contribute in a real way to our final publications.

Finally, and perhaps most importantly, we are a diverse community of students and friends who enjoy contributing to American criminal law scholarship. Throughout the year, we host social and training events geared toward our own development as a team of editors. Our vast alumni network stretches across all areas of legal practice, from prominent law firms to competitive clerkships, and we capitalize on those connections through frequent networking, career and clerkship events.

If you have any questions about our journal, please shoot me an email—I am happy to talk with you ahead of Write On, as are all other members of ACLR. You can also visit our website or check out our social media accounts for more information. Once the Competition begins, however, please contact the Office of Journal Administration with any questions or concerns at lawwriteon@georgetown.edu.

We look forward to welcoming you to Volume 59 of the American Criminal Law Review this fall!

Sincerely,

Sephora Grey                  Instagram: @AmCrimLRev
Editor-in-Chief, Vol. 59                Twitter: @AmCrimLRev
sg1460@georgetown.edu                Facebook: https://www.facebook.com/GULCACLR/
Personal Statement Prompts

The American Criminal Law Review’s strength and success come from its greatest assets: its staff and editors. In an effort to create an equitable, inclusive, and culturally rich ACLR community, we have included a personal statement component to our application. Our intention here is to recognize the uniqueness of your life experience and background as we consider your application, but not to overburden your Write On workload. To that end, feel free to utilize or rework other personal statements you have written in the past, including the one(s) you wrote while applying to law school.

There are two options for your personal statement, as described below. Whichever you choose, your statement should be double-spaced and 750 words or fewer, and should not include your name or other identifying information. Please include your Write On packet number.

1) Personal Narrative Statement

Personal Narrative Statements are, essentially, your traditional personal statement. This is your chance to describe your background, ideas, and interests, and introduce yourself to ACLR. What brought you here and what distinguishes you as an applicant?

2) Personal Diversity Statement

ACLR’s commitment to diversity in all forms is rooted in the deeply-held belief that engaging with new and unfamiliar ideas, perspectives, experiences, and people shapes leaders who will serve their clients and communities with acceptance, compassion, and respect. Such diversity also uplifts and includes those who have been historically excluded from “elite” and “academic” spaces. We strongly encourage applicants from underrepresented communities to submit a Personal Diversity Statement.

Your Personal Diversity Statement should explicitly identify and discuss how your identity, background, culture, life experiences, and perspectives would contribute to the diversity of ACLR. If applicable, you may also describe any adversity that you have overcome, including discrimination, micro-aggressions, linguistic barriers, or a personal or family history of educational or socioeconomic disadvantage. Most importantly, please illustrate how the factors you identify affect the way you think about the legal profession, law school, and legal ideology (including, but not limited to, criminal law) and the ways you can uniquely contribute to the work and community of ACLR.

Personal Diversity Statements may, for example, discuss how applicants’ perspectives on legal scholarship and academia, or their decision to pursue a legal career, have been influenced by:

- Religion
- Disability
- Race/Ethnicity
- Gender Identity
- Sexual Orientation
- Socioeconomic Status
Dear Rising Second-Year Students,

Congratulations on finishing your first year of law school! As your thoughts turn to journal membership, I encourage you to consider the Food and Drug Law Journal, particularly if you are interested in food, drug, or health law.

The Preeminent Journal in Food and Drug Law

The Food and Drug Law Journal is the preeminent journal in the field of food and drug law. It has led academic and practical discussions on those topics for more than seventy years. We produce leading scholarship from practitioners, academics, and law students on food, drugs, medical devices, biologics, cosmetics, and other health-related topics. That scholarship guides legal and medical professionals, policymakers, state and federal courts in understanding complex and evolving issues. Our field is interdisciplinary; our articles engage with many areas of law, including civil procedure, advertising law, patent law, environmental law, technology law, antitrust law, criminal law, regulatory and administrative law, intellectual property law, and constitutional law. Our journal’s exacting peer review process – completed by a board of leading food and drug law attorneys – ensures that our staff only review the most compelling scholarship in the field.

Partnered with Leading Professionals

The Food and Drug Law Journal is published at Georgetown University Law Center by the Food and Drug Law Institute (FDLI), a non-profit membership organization devoted to the field of food and drug law. FDLI’s membership includes leaders from public advocacy groups, academia, the FDA, private industry, and national and international law firms. FDLI members compose the Food and Drug Law Journal’s board of peer reviewers. Our close relationship with FDLI – and our resulting access to its members – provides invaluable mentorship, networking, and educational opportunities for our staff. Many journal members have pursued internships and jobs as a result of these opportunities.

Engaging with Georgetown Faculty and the O’Neill Institute

Our journal is also partnered with the O’Neill Institute for National and Global Health Law, an organization within GULC devoted to the improvement of health through law. This partnership has yielded the largest faculty advisory board of any Georgetown journal. Professors Cabrera, Girard, Gostin, Heinzingerling, Page, Thomas, Tushnet, Vladeck, and Westmoreland each enrich our journal with their diverse specialties and experiences. The Food and Drug Law Journal also coordinates an annual symposium with FDLI and the O’Neill Institute to discuss pressing topics in food and drug law.

Student Scholarship, Development, and Leadership

Each member of the Food and Drug Law Journal writes a student note related to the subject matter of the journal – we are excited to publish notes of requisite quality that complete our peer review process.
We are also committed to working with students who wish to pursue publication in other health-related journals. The student note requirement may be completed through any GULC course that fulfills the writing requirement. Past members have written notes for courses on a variety of issues, including health privacy, bioethics, food law, patent law, statutory interpretation, health care fraud, and class action litigation.

Our journal is small and selective. As a result, we prioritize communication and efficiency, investing significant time and resources in training and skill development for our members. From the start, we ensure that you have all the support, resources, and guidance you need to fulfill your responsibilities to the journal and sharpen the skills that employers value. We encourage all members to ask questions, collaborate, and give each other feedback. Our journal’s size and selectivity also provide members with increased opportunities to assume leadership positions as part of our senior board.

Membership, Personal Statement, and Resume

As a smaller, more selective journal, we value interest and fit as well as your qualifications and work ethic. Our selection criteria reflect those values; we weigh your Write On packet 30%, your Bluebook test 20%, your grades 10%, your personal statement 40%, and your resume (please remove your GPA).

All applicants must submit a personal statement and a resume in order to be considered for the Food and Drug Law Journal. The personal statement is your chance to address: (1) your interest in our journal; and (2) your interest or experience in health law or food and drug law. For applicants from diverse and under-represented backgrounds, we encourage you to include information in your response regarding how your experiences and background would further the Food and Drug Law Journal’s commitments to diversity and inclusion. Personal statements should be limited to 500 words, double-spaced, and should be written in 12-point, Times New Roman font. In submitting your personal statement and resume, please follow all relevant OJA guidelines on redaction.

This is an exciting time to be a part of the Food and Drug Law Journal, and I hope you will consider joining us! Feel free to email me with any questions prior to the start of the competition; during the competition, please contact OJA at lawwriteon@georgetown.edu regarding all inquiries. I look forward to welcoming you into our community this fall!

Sincerely,

Courtney Stone Mirski
Editor-in-Chief
Food and Drug Law Journal
cas477@georgetown.edu
Dear Rising Second-Year Students,

I hope this letter finds you well and your loved ones healthy, safe, and happy. As you look to your second year, we encourage you to consider joining the Georgetown Environmental Law Review (GELR).

Founded in 1988, GELR is widely recognized as a leading publication of thought-provoking scholarly commentary and practical environmental law analysis. Our publication spans a broad range of topics, including the intersections of administrative law, international law, constitutional theory, and federal and state policy and environmental law. In our current volume, in line with our commitment to equality and anti-racism, we are seeking to highlight pieces covering environmental justice and civil and human rights. GELR also hosts a biennial symposium on topics of current prominence. For our symposium next spring, we will be inviting practitioners from around the country to write and present on Just Transitions and Climate Change.

At GELR, we seek to make your time and commitment as valuable as possible. All members have the unique opportunity to write original short-form blog posts that are published online by the end of their second year. All members also submit notes for consideration for publication in our print issues before the spring semester of their third year. Members choose their own topics and receive feedback on their writing from editors and mentors for both of these notes. In addition to traditional staff editor responsibilities, these writing opportunities allow members to come away from journal with improved writing, research, and editing skills. Further, nearly all members progress to senior editor positions for their third year, giving members an opportunity for continued growth. Unlike some of the other journals at Georgetown, GELR does not require our members to attend any office hours. We are fully supportive of our members studying abroad, and we encourage part-time students to join!

By joining GELR, you will become part of a close-knit community of students, Georgetown Law faculty, practitioners, and alumni. We are in the process of rolling out a mentorship program and alumni networking events and look forward to continuing hosting optional social events for our members.

Please reach out to me or other GELR members with any questions; my email is included with my signature. Once the Competition begins, please direct all inquiries and correspondence to the Office of Journal Administration, lawwriteon@georgetown.edu. Thank you for your consideration, and good luck with Write On!

Best Wishes,
Perri Haser
Editor-In-Chief, Volume XXIV
Pah78@georgetown.edu
Georgetown Environmental Law Review Write On Criteria:

Admission to GELR is based on a combination of grades (10%), case comment (30%), bluebook and editing test (30%), and personal statement (30%). We include a personal statement review as part of our effort to make our selection process holistic and allow candidates to highlight their unique strengths and experiences. All personal statements should be double spaced, in 12-point font size, Times New Roman font, and 500-750 words in length. In submitting your personal statement and resume, please follow all relevant OJA guidelines on redaction and anonymity. Competitors may write their personal statement on one of the following three topics:

1. Diversity Personal Statement

GELR is strongly committed to promoting diversity, equity, and inclusion in our journal. We thus encourage candidates from under-represented communities to consider completing a diversity personal statement. This statement should identify and discuss how your identity, background, culture, and/or life experiences have shaped the way you think about the legal profession, law school, and/or legal ideology.

While by no means an all-encompassing list, Personal Diversity Statements often discuss how an applicant’s perspective has been influenced by:

- Race, Ethnicity, Nationality
- Gender Identity
- Sexual Orientation
- Religion
- Disability
- Socioeconomic Status

2. Environment and the Law Personal Statement

Please explain why you are particularly interested in joining GELR. We are always eager to have members with a passion for our scholarship on environmental issues. In this statement, discuss why you want to be a member of GELR, in particular, and how your experience would help you contribute to the journal. Please feel free to discuss relevant academic, professional, or personal experiences with environmental work and how it would relate to your work with GELR.

3. Standard Personal Statement

You can approach this personal statement option in the same way you did when applying to law school. Please use this prompt as an opportunity to tell us about yourself and what makes you a unique applicant to our journal. It is perfectly acceptable to use the personal statement you wrote when applying to law school.
Dear Prospective Journal Members,

Thank you for your interest in the Georgetown Immigration Law Journal (GILJ). We are the only student-edited law journal in the country devoted to the study of immigration and international migration, and we would love to have you join our community!

GILJ addresses issues in human rights, public health, national security, labor, constitutional, criminal, and administrative law with an immigration focus. As national leaders are constantly reevaluating immigration programs and policies, immigration is a dynamic field. Commonly discussed in the media and frequently debated in legal circles, immigration is profoundly complex and offers a fascinating study of present and future global concerns. The present climate of changing immigration policy across the globe has especially increased the scholarly relevance of GILJ. As the nation grapples with truth reconciliation regarding the history of our nation, our Journal is committed to publishing intersectional and interdisciplinary scholarship rooted in justice, innovation, and liberation.

GILJ values your time, and we strive to make the entire Journal experience a positive one. We are fair about deadlines, and respectful of your other commitments. As a large portion of our work is done online, GILJ is compatible with the schedules of day and evening students alike. Please note that some editorial board positions may be limited to students who are studying the full year at Georgetown, including the positions of Editor-in-Chief, Managing Editor, and Executive Editor. Other positions can and have been held by students while studying abroad. To enhance the Journal experience, we will hold community town halls and social gatherings. The GILJ Board is currently taking steps to bolster our opportunities for more academic and professional development.

We deeply value the expertise of our members, and wish to involve 2L members beyond bluebooking. Accordingly, GILJ is excited to implement the #ImmigrationAND program starting in the Fall to center diversity and justice in our community values and legal training. The #ImmigrationAND program will: (1) introduce GILJ members to the diversity and range of immigration law practice in the public sector; (2) engage journal members in cutting-edge issues in immigration law across multiple disciplines; and (3) train members in applying a diversity and justice lens in their legal careers. 2L members will have the unique opportunity to work closely with the GILJ Board in planning seminar-style educational and networking events on immigration topics that are centered around diversity and justice. Participating 2L members will receive a certificate of completion. 2L and 3L members will also have the opportunity to engage with renowned faculty in immigration at Georgetown Law, our faculty advisors, and advisory board comprising national and international experts through coffee chats. Additionally, after serving on GILJ for a year, all 2Ls members will graduate into an editorial or senior editorial position.

All GILJ members are required to write a Student Note by January of 3L year. Student Notes must be related to topics covered by the Journal. We encourage our members to meet this Student Note requirement in conjunction with fulfilling Georgetown’s Writing Requirement. Please keep this in mind when registering for classes. We will provide members with resources on examples of classes taken in the past in addition to ideas and examples of topics explored by students. The Journal strives to publish all Student Notes that meet our quality standards. GILJ members may also submit a short Current Development piece (5-7 pages, publication available on Westlaw) on current happenings and controversies in the field.
A preference of 1 or 2 gives you a great chance of making the Journal as most successful past applicants have ranked GILJ in their top 3 choices. GILJ values an applicant’s interest in the immigration field and competition scores more than grades; a good writer who reads carefully and is passionate about the immigration and migration is likely to make a good staff editor. We are especially interested in your motivations for being on GILJ. Our selection criteria reflects these values; we weigh your personal statement 35%, your case comment 30%, your Bluebook test 30%, and your grades 5%.

As we continue to grapple with recovery from COVID-19 and its long-term implications, please know that the GILJ Board is here to support you. We believe that through open communication, transparency, and community support, we will be able to make GILJ work for anyone who is committed. Please do not hesitate to contact me before the Write-On Competition with questions about the Journal or the Competition process. After the Competition opens, please contact the Office of Journal Administration with any questions at lawwriteon@georgetown.edu.

I wish you the best with the Competition, and I look forward to welcoming you aboard our community.

Warmly,

Prashasti Bhatnagar
Editor-in-Chief, Georgetown Immigration Law Journal
Email: pb909@georgetown.edu
Twitter: gulcimmigration
Personal Statement Prompts

The Georgetown Immigration Law Journal strives to create an equitable, inclusive, and culturally rich community, where all our members feel welcome and have the resources to thrive. We are aware that the Journal community often acts as gatekeepers of knowledge and scholarship production, and that historically, these spaces have excluded members from underrepresented and marginalized communities. To that end, we have included a personal statement component to our application that is heavily weighted to help remove some of the barriers from our Write-On and Journal membership selection process. Additionally, our intention is not to increase your Write-On workload. Therefore, we invite you to utilize or rework other personal statements you have written in the past, including the one(s) you wrote while applying to law school.

We are providing two options for your personal statement. Please feel free to mix and match the two options (that is, blending the personal statement with the personal diversity statement). Whichever option you choose, please ensure that your personal statement follows these mechanics:

(a) 1.5 line spacing;
(b) maximum of 750 words (please indicate your word count at the top of your statement); (c) Times New Roman, font size 12.

Any personal statement submissions should follow the redaction guidelines in the Competition instructions. Please include your Write-On packet number.

1) Personal Statement: GILJ is especially interested in your motivations for being on the Journal. Please state your interest in GILJ, the immigration field, and/or any other information that would highlight your enthusiasm for being on GILJ.

2) Personal Diversity Statement: GILJ is deeply committed to center our community values and legal training in diversity and justice. As we noted above, our hope with including the option of diversity statements is to amplify diverse perspectives and scholarship, as well as to remove the stringent barriers that prevent people from serving on Journals. We strongly encourage applicants from underrepresented communities to submit a Personal Diversity Statement. Your statement should explicitly identify and discuss how your identity, background, culture, life experiences, and perspectives have:

(1) shaped your values,
(2) shaped your interest in the legal profession, law school, and legal ideology, and
(3) position you to uniquely contribute to the work and community of GILJ.

We also invite you to share, when applicable, any adversity that you have overcome, including but not limited to discrimination (both overt and covert), micro-aggressions, linguistic barriers, or a personal or family history of educational or socioeconomic disadvantage at any point in your life. Please remember there is no one way to write your diversity statement, and we welcome you to share what feels authentic, comfortable, and safe to you.

Some examples of diversity factors include:

- Disability
- Ethnicity
- Gender Identity
- Sexual Orientation
- Race
- Socioeconomic Status
- Underrepresented Religion
Dear Rising Second-Year Students:

Congratulations on completing your first year of law school, in some of the most unprecedented times. Be proud of everything you have accomplished! The mission of The Georgetown Journal of Gender and the Law is to explore the impact of gender and sexuality on both the theory and practice of law. We seek to complement the critical work being done by existing journals by expanding inquiries into the intersection between gender and sexuality. We are one of the only legal journals in the world to explicitly address these intersections.

Our journal’s three annual issues integrate cutting-edge legal scholarship and practical applications. Our most unique publication is the student-authored Annual Review of Gender and the Law—the nation’s only comprehensive guide to legal issues relating to gender and sexuality. The Annual Review serves as an important tool for practitioners, judges, advocacy organizations, and scholars as it summarizes existing law and highlights recent changes.

Additionally, in June 2018, our Online content launched. The Online edition allows every journal member, including 2Ls, to publish content that focuses on issues they care deeply about. 2022 will be a Symposium year, meaning that staff members who join this year will plan and execute the Volume XXIV Symposium in either the fall or spring of academic year 2022-2023. In 2018 (Volume XX), our Symposium focused on immigration issues that impact gender non-conforming people, trans people, women, and other marginalized populations. This year (Volume XXII), our Symposium focuses on the evolution of technology & gender-related offenses.

Benefits of Gender Journal Membership

Learn About a Dynamic Legal Field – Legal scholarship on gender and sexuality encompasses a broad range of important and fast-moving areas of law, including constitutional law, family law, criminal law, education law, employment law, health law, and more. We brought Vice President Joe Biden to campus on April 22, 2009, for our symposium on the 15th anniversary of the Violence Against Women Act. In 2013, we hosted a symposium on the 25th anniversary of Gay Rights Coalition of Georgetown Law Center v. Georgetown University, the case that opened Georgetown University Law Center to LGBT organizations like Outlaw. In 2018, we hosted a number of speakers and authors including Jodie Roure, who recently presented her findings to the United Nations.

Publish – On GJGL, you have the opportunity to get published—twice! Each 2L staff member either writes or updates and edits a section of the Annual Review. As a result, GJGL is one of the only journals at Georgetown to guarantee its members the opportunity to publish a substantial piece in their second year of law school. Additionally, Gender Journal members are eligible to publish Student Notes in our publication. Because issues of gender and sexuality have implications for many areas of the law, students have considerable freedom to focus their notes on the discipline of their choosing.
Hone Your Research and Writing Skills – Our journal is committed to helping individual members refine their legal skills through substantive research, writing, and editing projects. 2L staff members do much more than simply Bluebook and cite-check. We encourage our staff members to research and write on areas of the law that they are passionate about! Our staff members substantially revise and update Annual Review articles during the fall semester and begin work on original student notes during the spring semester, working closely with the 3L members of the Journal and receiving substantive feedback on their work. Additionally, should the staff member choose, they can write content for our Online Edition in lieu of the traditional note requirement.

Work Hard and Have Fun – The members of the Gender Journal are a fun, diverse, inclusive, and passionate group of students with varied political persuasions, experiences, and career goals. We encourage interaction among staff members in both social and professional/mentorship contexts and offer ample leadership opportunities. We are also committed to maintaining a community that respects our members’ other priorities and provides ample recognition for the hard work of our staff.

Networking and Career Benefits – The members of the Gender Journal stand out to potential employers because they recognize the unique leadership and intellectual opportunities that a specialty journal offers. We host networking events throughout the year where members have the opportunity to engage with Gender Journal alumni and advisors, including some of the nation’s most prestigious feminist legal faculty, judges, law firm partners, and legal advocates.

Write On Criteria

Our journal seeks to maintain a diverse staff that shares the Gender Journal’s mission. Admission to the Journal is based on a combination of grades (15%), case comment (35%), Bluebook and editing test (25%), and personal statement (25%). I encourage you to reach out to either myself or any member of the Gender Journal should you have any questions—my email is below. Once the Competition starts, please direct all correspondence to the Office of Journal Administration, lawwriteon@georgetown.edu.

The Georgetown Journal of Gender and the Law is one of the most exciting opportunities at the Law Center. I look forward to welcoming you to our team!

Sincerely,

Kalli Anne Joslin
Editor-in-Chief, Volume XXIII
The Georgetown Journal of Gender and the Law
kaj87@georgetown.edu
Georgetown Journal of Gender and the Law: Personal Statement Prompts

Rationale: In an effort to make our selection process more holistic, provide an opportunity to recognize your unique strengths and experiences, and boost journal diversity, The Georgetown Journal of Gender and the Law has included a personal statement component to our application. All personal statements should be double spaced and 750 words or less. The personal statement should also not include your name, other identifying information, or the number prompt you are answering. We have included several approaches/prompts for the personal statement component:

Option #1: Standard Personal Statement

For option #1 you can approach the personal statement in the same way in which you did when applying to law school, as an opportunity to tell the journal about yourself and what distinguishes you as an applicant. In order to minimize any additional workload in the write-on process, it is perfectly acceptable to utilize the personal statement you wrote when applying to law school.

Option #2: Gender and the Law Personal Statement

For option #2 you can explain why you are particularly interested in joining the Georgetown Journal of Gender and the Law. We are always eager to have members with a passion for our scholarship of Gender and Sexuality issues. For option #2, simply explain why you want to be a member of the gender law journal in particular and how your experiences would help you contribute to the journal.

Option #3: Diversity Personal Statement

The Georgetown Journal of Gender and the Law is strongly committed to promoting diversity and inclusion in our journal, which we believe improves our scholarship and enriches the experience of all of our members. We strongly encourage applicants from under-represented communities to consider completing a diversity personal statement so we can be intentional in these efforts.

A Diversity Personal Statement can identify and discuss how your identity, background, culture, life experiences, and/or perspective would contribute to the diversity of our journal. If applicable, you may also describe any adversity that you have overcome, including discrimination, a personal or family history of educational or socioeconomic disadvantage, linguistic barriers, or other circumstances you believe are applicable. We encourage you to identify the way these experiences have impacted the way you think about the legal profession, law school, and legal ideology, as well as the ways you can uniquely contribute to the work and community of the Journal.

While by no means an all-encompassing list, Personal Diversity Statements have discussed how an applicant’s perspectives on legal scholarship and academia, or his or her decision to pursue a legal career, have been influenced by:

- Religion
- Race/Ethnicity
- Sexual Orientation
- Disability
- Gender Identity
- Socioeconomic Status

Option #4: Mix and Match

If you want to blend approaches (through a gender law specific personal statement [#2] that draws on your experience with discrimination [#3], for example), you are more than welcome to do so!
Dear First-Year Students,

Congratulations on completing your first year of law school! As you begin thinking about your second year, we at the Georgetown Journal of International Law (GJIL) hope you will apply to join us.

Founded in 1969, GJIL has grown from its roots as the Georgetown Journal of Law and Policy in International Business into one of the nation’s top journals in the diverse and constantly growing field of international law. Along with our peer international law journals at schools such as Harvard, Stanford, and Virginia, GJIL is recognized as one of the nation’s top resources for scholars and practitioners in the field of international law.

GJIL is an excellent choice for anyone interested in international, transnational, or comparative law. We are committed to publishing diverse content that is relevant to legal practitioners and academics. To that end, GJIL publishes four issues per year, covering the full range of legal topics in international law. Additionally, our annual International Trade Review offers a comprehensive snapshot of international trade law and includes practitioner commentaries on current developments in the field. We also hold a bi-annual Symposium on a topic of current prominence. Recent topics have included The Evolving Role of International Organizations and Cooperation, Corporate Responsibility and the Alien Tort Statute, and International Cyberlaw. Our next Symposium will take place in spring of 2023.

By joining GJIL you will become part of a dynamic and talented community. Many of our members speak multiple languages, have lived abroad, and have worked in international law. Whether as summer interns with the World Health Organization or the South African Human Rights Commission, or as summer associates at large international firms, our members have a wealth of knowledge and experience to share. We further enhance our expertise in the field through the presence of LL.M. students as advisors.

We seek to make your time on GJIL as valuable as possible. As 2L staff, you will have the opportunity to review high-quality legal scholarship and contribute to the direction of future issues. Our 2L staff work closely with 3Ls selecting articles, editing substance, authoring online content, soliciting scholars, and shaping big-picture initiatives. In addition, all members have a chance to make a meaningful contribution to international law scholarship by submitting a note to be considered for publication. GJIL’s Notes Committee provides students with the flexibility, time, and guidance to thoughtfully complete the Journal’s note requirement by the end of their 3L first semester.

Selection for GJIL is based on a combination of an optional personal diversity statement (20%), grades (20%), the Write On case comment (30%), and the Write On Bluebook test (30%). We recognize the unique challenges we all have faced over the past year as a result of COVID-19 and are mindful of the potential impact on performance. This year, we are apportioning less weight to grades. While not a perfect solution, our hope is that the expanded timeline for the Write On Competition will allow students greater flexibility in setting the time and conditions under which to complete the case comment and Bluebook test. Additionally, we are instituting an optional personal diversity statement for the first time this year. The legal field must improve in creating opportunities for and retaining diverse candidates, and the journal community is no exception. GJIL and its international focus particularly benefit from a globally-minded and dynamic community. Please feel free to contact me via email at bs1096@georgetown.edu if you have any questions prior to the start of the Write On Competition. After the Competition opens, please contact the Office of Journal Administration with any questions at lawwriteon@georgetown.edu. We wish you the best of luck on exams and in the Write On competition and hope to welcome you to the 53rd Volume of the Georgetown Journal of International Law.

Best regards,

Bhaavya Sinha
Editor-in-Chief, Volume 53
Georgetown Journal of International Law
Personal Diversity Statement

GJIL is strongly committed to promoting diversity and inclusion in our journal. We are acutely aware that building a globally-minded and dynamic community improves our scholarship and enriches the experiences of all of our members. GJIL is proud to have a membership that represents various communities, perspectives, and backgrounds, but our previous selection process did not allow students from historically underrepresented backgrounds to highlight that characteristic as a factor for consideration. Therefore, we are instituting a Personal Diversity Statement to provide those students with an opportunity to highlight that characteristic in their application to our journal. Given the focus of our journal, we strongly encourage applicants from the Global South as well as those with a close personal or academic connection to the Global South to consider submitting a Personal Diversity Statement, as we currently struggle with representation from this region of the world.

Personal Diversity Statements will be evaluated based on the quality of the narrative and the content presented. Students are not required to submit a Personal Diversity Statement. Students who do not feel compelled to submit a Personal Diversity Statement should not submit one for the sake of completion.

If you choose to write a Personal Diversity Statement, please identify and discuss how your identity, background, culture, life experiences, and/or perspectives would contribute to the diversity of GJIL and enrich the journal. Additionally, please explain how these factors shape the way you think about the legal profession, law school and legal ideology (including, but not limited to, international law) and the ways you can uniquely contribute to the work and community of GJIL.

Your Personal Diversity Statement should be 750 words or less (double-spaced, 12-point font, Times New Roman). Please exclude your name and any other identifying information. Please include your Write On packet number. For further guidance on anonymizing your materials, please refer to the Write On Competition Instructions.
Dear Prospective Staff Members,

The Georgetown Journal of Law & Modern Critical Race Perspectives (MCRP) occupies a uniquely impactful position at the intersection of law and social activism not only at Georgetown Law but in the legal community as a whole. The Journal provides a forum for academic scholarship, a setting for rigorous student editorial experience, and a platform for meaningful discourse on the pressing issues of our time. Especially in light of the current reckoning around race, the Journal seeks to be a leader for change within legal academia and in the local, national, and global community by expanding scholarship on racial justice as grounded in Critical Race Theory. Our journal channels Critical Race Theory as a foundational practice of analysis of existing power structures as they relate to the legal and social construction of race. MCRP is a medium for academics, scholars, and professionals who seek to advance civil rights and racial justice in the face of ongoing and novel challenges.

Our members receive the opportunity to engage with authors who have defined the Critical Race Theory movement and work with those advancing new perspectives. This upcoming year, we look forward to strengthening these connections through our bi-annual Symposium, during which members will have a chance to observe and contribute to timely conversations and thought-provoking panels. As a team that takes pride in the power of our small and mighty staff, MCRP is committed to building a community of socially progressive scholars dedicated to activism and meaningful change. We publish every student note of sufficient quality submitted by our members, who also have opportunities to publish content through reaction pieces, posts on current events, and new audiovisual segments. Staff reactions are published alongside the articles to which they are responding in both print and online formats, allowing a direct discourse in each issue. Our Executive Board members are leaders on campus and in the community, and are eager to provide mentorship and support to new staff members.

When determining membership, we rely on Write-On Competition scores, grades, resumes, and personal statements from applicants. All resumes and personal statements must be anonymized per Competition instructions prior to submission. Please feel free to contact me if you would like to learn more about MCRP and your potential role, or if you have any questions before the Competition begins. After the Competition opens, please direct any questions to the Office of Journal Administration at lawwriteon@georgetown.edu. I look forward to hearing from you and am excited to meet and work with you in the future!

Sincerely,

Rujuta Nandgaonkar
Editor-in-Chief, Georgetown Journal of Law & Modern Critical Race Perspectives
Rsn8@georgetown.edu

MCRP Personal Statement Prompt

MCRP’s mission is to promote racial justice through scholarly activism. Please write a short statement (no more than 500 words) describing why you hope to join MCRP, and why you believe critical race is important to legal scholarship. Your answer should address your personal interest in MCRP and how you see yourself contributing to our mission. Please include any specific academic, professional, or personal experience regarding topics related to diversity and/or critical race theory that highlight your unique perspective and potential contribution to our staff. Please keep in mind that all submissions should be anonymous, as consistent with the official Competition instructions. We look forward to reading your statement!
Dear Rising Second Year Students,

The Georgetown Journal of Law & Public Policy is one of only a handful of law journals in the country dedicated to exploring and critiquing conservative, libertarian, and natural law perspectives on law and policy. Our journal focuses not on a single area of the law but on a way of thinking, exposing journal members to a nearly endless array of subject matter. Recent issues contain articles and student notes on topics as varied as the president’s pardon power, originalist constitutional theory, Medicare and Medicaid reform, drug legalization, self-driving cars, religious freedom, and women’s rights under the Privileges or Immunities Clause. Due to our partnership with the Georgetown Center for the Constitution, we attract works from renowned constitutional law scholars, noted academics, and expert practitioners. Distinguished authors who have published with GJLPP include Erwin Chemerinsky, John McGinnis, Richard Epstein, Paul Larkin, Senator Bill Frist, and Senator John McCain. We are also dedicated to giving outstanding students a platform, publishing a high percentage of student notes.

GJLPP is a relatively young journal—we will be publishing our twentieth volume next year—but we take pride that our influence continues to grow. Our journal was cited by Justice Scalia in District of Columbia v. Heller, by Justice Thomas in Northwest Austin Utility District v. Holder, by Justice Gorsuch in Kisor v. Wilkie, and by Judge Sykes in Ezell v. City of Chicago. State supreme courts, federal district courts, and numerous law reviews have also cited our journal. Our focus on conservative, libertarian, and natural law perspectives uniquely positions us to influence many of the legal debates currently dominating the national conversation.

Thanks to our symposium-based partnership with the Center for the Constitution, each issue we publish contains articles from eminent scholars grappling with a particular constitutional issue. The first issue of Volume 20 will contain articles focusing on the Nineteenth Amendment, commemorating the 100th anniversary of its adoption. The second issue will examine the relationship between the United States Constitution and slavery. Given the current conversations surrounding American history and race, we expect this issue to be an especially timely and valuable addition to the national discourse.

One of our most substantial contributions to Georgetown Law and the legal community is diversity of thought. GJLPP is proud to serve as a forum for in-depth and thought-provoking scholarship that is not afraid to challenge the conventional wisdom, a role that has arguably never been more important than it is right now. As such, we value diverse perspectives in the articles and notes we publish. We gladly welcome students whose ideas span the political and ideological spectrum.

In evaluating Write On candidates, we weigh your Write On score 40%, your Bluebook score 30%, and your grades 30%. We do not require a résumé or personal statement. Please do not hesitate to contact me at ldb73@georgetown.edu if you have any questions before the Write On Competition begins. We look forward to welcoming many of you to the GJLPP team.

Sincerely,

Luke Bunting
Editor-in-Chief, Volume 20
Georgetown Journal of Law & Public Policy
Dear Rising Second Year Students,

Congratulations on finishing your first year at Georgetown University Law Center. We are so impressed with the resilience and adaptability your class has shown. You should be proud of yourselves. As you consider how to continue to get the most out of your law school experience, we hope you will consider joining the editorial staff of Volume 35 of the Georgetown Journal of Legal Ethics (GJLE).

GJLE is America’s leading ethics journal. As the second most-cited journal at Georgetown, GJLE is also in the top 100 journals nationally, and is one of the nation’s most-cited student-run specialty journals. Our scholarship is motivated by the question: what does the legal profession owe not only to its clients, but to society? As the legal profession is confronted with crucial issues of racial injustice, the response to the COVID-19 pandemic, and the integrity of our democratic institutions, GJLE’s mission has never been more important or timely.

All GJLE members write original notes that are published at the end of their 2L/2E year. provided the notes meet the journal’s quality requirements. Members choose their own topics and receive feedback from editors and mentors. Members may find it easiest to enroll in a seminar course for the fall semester, which will allow them to simultaneously fulfill their upper-level writing and note requirements. Since GJLE is one of the most generalist journals on campus, our members have written about everything from the need to hold State Department lawyers to higher ethical standards regarding their duty to provide candid advice to the U.S. government about complicity in war crimes, to the effect of the O.J. Simpson Strategy on the jury selection process, to the impact of artificial intelligence on the legal field. You can find our most recent issue of student published notes here (and look out for more information about descriptions of student notes to be published in future volumes on GJLE's website here). We are proud that our journal provides this unique opportunity for all our members to be published authors in their second year of law school.

GJLE is also proud of its enduring commitment to public service and social justice. When the late Father Robert Drinan founded the journal, after his career as a congressman and human rights advocate, he wrote, “No journal has been established as the central forum for the discussion and development of the ethical and professional dilemmas confronting the lawyers of America . . . . [GJLE] hopes to be that forum.” We maintain his belief that lawyers should play a special role in promoting justice and equality and that we, as law students, can work to further these goals. As a result, GJLE is actively involved in community service in the D.C. community. We are planning on making 2021 a breakout year for our journal's engagement and leadership on legal ethics issues.

If you have any questions about GJLE prior to Write On, please feel free to contact me at ad1145@georgetown.edu. Once the Competition starts, please contact lawwriteon@georgetown.edu with any questions. We hope to welcome you to the legal ethics team in the fall.

Sincerely,

Anashua Dutta
Editor-in-Chief, Volume XXXV
The Georgetown Journal of Legal Ethics
Georgetown Journal of Legal Ethics: Personal Statement Prompts

Rationale: In an effort to make our selection process more holistic, provide an opportunity to recognize your unique strengths and experiences, and boost journal diversity, the Georgetown Journal of Legal Ethics has included a personal statement component to our application. All personal statements should be double spaced and 750 words or less. The personal statement should also not include your name, other identifying information, or the number prompt you are answering, in accordance with the Competition instructions. We have included several approaches/prompts for the personal statement component:

Option #1: Standard Personal Statement

For option #1 you can approach the personal statement in the same way in which you did when applying to law school, as an opportunity to tell the journal about yourself and what distinguishes you as an applicant. In order to minimize any additional workload in the write-on process, it is perfectly acceptable to utilize the personal statement you wrote when applying to law school.

Option #2: Legal Ethics Personal Statement

For option #2 you can explain why you are particularly interested in joining the Georgetown Journal of Legal Ethics. We are always eager to have members with a passion for our scholarship and legal ethics issues. For option #2, simply explain why you want to be a member of the legal ethics journal in particular and how your experiences would help you contribute to the journal.

Option #3: Diversity Personal Statement

The Georgetown Journal of Legal Ethics is strongly committed to promoting diversity and inclusion in our journal, which we believe improves our scholarship and enriches the experience of all of our members. We strongly encourage applicants from under-represented communities to consider completing a diversity personal statement so we can be intentional in these efforts.

A Diversity Personal Statement can identify and discuss how your identity, background, culture, life experiences, and/or perspective would contribute to the diversity of our journal. If applicable, you may also describe any adversity that you have overcome, including discrimination, a personal or family history of educational or socioeconomic disadvantage, linguistic barriers, or other circumstances you believe are applicable. We encourage you to identify the way these experiences have impacted the way you think about the legal profession, law school, and legal ideology, as well as the ways you can uniquely contribute to the work and community of the Journal.

While by no means an all-encompassing list, Personal Diversity Statements discussing how an applicant’s perspectives on legal scholarship and academia, or his or her decision to pursue a legal career, have been influenced by:

- Race
- Disability
- Gender Identity
- Socioeconomic Status
- Religion
- Sexual Orientation

Option #4: Mix and Match

If you want to blend approaches (through a legal ethics specific personal statement [#2] that draws on your experience with a disability [#3], for example), you are more than welcome to do so!
Dear Journal Candidate,

We are thrilled you are considering the Georgetown Journal on Poverty Law and Policy, the nation’s premier law journal on poverty issues. Our journal publishes innovative, solutions-based scholarship by distinguished law professors, scholars, practitioners, and students. At the Poverty Journal, we are committed to ensuring that our staff members receive a rewarding educational experience and feel valued for their contributions.

Poverty law is vastly intersectional and encompasses a wide range of legal topics, including health care, housing, education, and employment law. To this end, the Journal’s mission is to support the fight against poverty by showcasing comprehensive and multidisciplinary scholarship. Can a civil rights framework be used to secure baseline water and sanitation access? What are the legal tools available to address rural poverty? How has the COVID-19 pandemic exacerbated the desperate conditions afflicting so many of those impoverished in our country and what avenues have opened to combat poverty as a result? These are the kinds of timely questions that the Journal addresses.

We are students with diverse aspirations, and we are pursuing careers in a wide range of legal fields, working in government, at private firms, and at nonprofits. Although our professional goals are varied, we share an enthusiasm for public interest work and a concern with the intersections of poverty and the law.

The Journal supports the academic and professional growth of all members. We provide guidance for completing all assignments throughout the year. We also offer opportunities for students to publish their own work, including a Note on a poverty-related topic and a contribution of a creative and thought-provoking piece to the Journal’s online content section. Members may fulfill the Note requirement by either (1) submitting a Note or (2) contributing three written pieces for publication on GJPLP online. Members selecting the first option can produce their Note either by (a) successfully completing a writing requirement course related to poverty law, or (b) conducting independent research with guidance from our Notes Editor.

I hope that you seriously consider joining the Georgetown Journal on Poverty Law and Policy. Our selection process emphasizes a holistic approach to each applicant, incorporating the Write On Competition score, grades, and a required resume and statement. You are close to completing a very challenging year and we are proud of all your hard work and resilience. As we look forward to a new year with new beginnings, we recognize the profoundly personal and disproportionate impact of COVID-19, and its effect on your 1L experience. However, during these unprecedented times, we hope that you prioritize your health and safety. Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have any questions. I wish you the best of luck during the competition, and I look forward to meeting you in the future!

Sincerely,
Zachary Krause
Editor-in-Chief, Volume 29
zwk6@georgetown.edu
GJPLP Required Resume and Required Statement

GJPLP requires submission of an anonymized resume and personal statement to provide some insight into who you are and why you hope to join GJPLP. Please write a short statement describing why you believe poverty law & policy is important to legal scholarship. Your statement may draw on your personal background, past professional, academic, and/or personal experiences. You are also encouraged to relate your interest in GJPLP to your diversity (as defined below) and how you see yourself contributing to our mission. Your statement of 500 - 750 words (double-spaced, 12-point Times New Roman font) should include your Write On packet number, but not your name. For guidance on anonymizing your resume, please refer to the Write On Competition instructions. We look forward to reading your statement!

If applicable, diversity factors may include but are not limited to:

- Disability
- Ethnicity
- Gender Identity
- Race
- Socioeconomic Status
- Underrepresented Religion
Dear Prospective Members,

Congratulations. This academic year has presented extraordinary difficulties, and you all have overcome them bravely. I admire each of you for completing the most challenging year of law school with such grit and integrity. After finishing exams, I hope you all take a moment to relax and recover before diving into the Write On Competition. Write On is certainly a demanding and intellectually stimulating exercise, and I encourage you all to embrace this new and exciting challenge. I am confident that the experiences you will gain from journal participation—camaraderie, teamwork, and deep academic engagement—will be worth your dedication during Write On. Needless to say, I wholeheartedly encourage you to opt-in and apply to The Georgetown Law Journal.

The Journal, celebrating its 110th anniversary, is one of the oldest and most prestigious law reviews in the country. As a member of this highly regarded journal, you will work on editing—both substantively and technically—scholarship written by some of the most influential legal academics in the world. Some of the pieces we publish will shape legal discourse for years to come.

One of the Journal’s greatest strengths is our generalist approach to scholarship. Journal members have the unique opportunity to deepen their understanding of a wide array of legal issues, from constitutional law to complex litigation; from business law to legal history; from tech law to civil rights, and beyond. Additionally, Journal members engage deeply with the current state of criminal law while contributing to our treatise—the Annual Review of Criminal Procedure. In addition to the academic benefits of membership, the Journal makes fostering community one of its principal goals. As the largest journal on campus, members have the opportunity to meet and connect with colleagues and alumni from various personal and professional backgrounds, both through the course of our work and through organized social events. Each year, the newly admitted staff cohort plays a major role in shaping and developing the Journal’s identity, and you all will be at the center of that growth.

Membership

Students must opt-in to the Journal to be considered for membership. Georgetown students earn membership in three ways:

1. 50% of our new members will be accepted solely based on their Write On scores. The Write On score will weight students’ case comment score 60% and their Bluebook test 40%.

2. 20% of our new members will be accepted based on a formula that equally weighs Write On scores and grades.

3. 30% of our new members will be selected solely based on their Personal Diversity Statement, provided that they have reached a certain threshold score on their Write On Submission.

The Personal Diversity Statement is optional but encouraged. The Statement should describe how your diverse background has shaped your approach to the legal profession and may offer reflections on how you have overcome adversity. The statement should also illustrate how any of these relevant factors will contribute to the membership and/or scholarship of the Journal. The prompt is attached below.

Transfer students are selected solely based on their Write On score.

Also, please be aware that if you accept an invitation to join GLJ, you will be required to attend our two Staff Orientation days on August 21st and 28th.
Scholarship

Each year, the Journal selects approximately twenty-five articles for publication from nearly three thousand submissions. This process offers an unparalleled opportunity to interact with—and critique—the work of the world’s most prominent legal scholars. The Journal also publishes approximately ten Georgetown Law students’ notes for publication. In recent years, we have extended our scholarship online. Today, GLJ Online provides an expedited publication process for high-caliber scholarship that engages in time-sensitive legal debates and discussions. In addition to selecting and editing articles, Journal members write a scholarly note on any legal topic of their choice and may submit their work for publication in both the print Journal and GLJ Online.

The Annual Review of Criminal Procedure

Each staff member contributes to the Annual Review of Criminal Procedure (ARCP), also known as the “practitioner’s bible” for the federal criminal bar. The ARCP resembles a hornbook, providing an overview of current criminal law, and is a highly visible legal publication that is widely used by judges, academics, practitioners, and pro se litigants. The ARCP also serves as a vehicle for social justice and public outreach—it is one of the greatest resources for inmates and public interest organizations across the country. The ARCP helps create a more holistic Journal experience, allowing members to hone their legal research skills while contributing to an invaluable public interest publication that has a concrete impact on the lives of those most vulnerable. The ARCP serves as the pro bono arm of GLJ, donating a significant number of ARCP copies to indigent prison inmates.

Community

The Journal strives to offer students a supportive and welcoming community, bringing together dynamic individuals from diverse backgrounds. During their time on the Journal, members form lasting personal and professional relationships that continue far beyond the initial two years of membership. Our Annual Alumni Banquet brings together past and present Journal members from across the nation. All Journal members are encouraged to participate in our mentoring program, social activities, and professional networking events.

Leadership

The Journal offers numerous leadership opportunities, helping members develop research, editorial, and managerial skills that will aid them throughout their legal careers. Upon the successful completion of their staff duties, all staff members will be promoted to editorial positions. Members may lead committees, spearhead initiatives, or serve on the Journal’s Senior Board.

If you have any questions prior to the Competition I encourage you to reach out to me or any other member of the Journal and to visit our website at www.georgetownlawjournal.org. With an unquestionably taxing year behind us, I want each of you to feel supported throughout this process. Once the Write On Competition has begun, inquiries can be addressed to the Office of Journal Administration at lawwriteon@georgetown.edu. I hope that you will opt-in to the Journal—not only for the doors it will open throughout your legal career, but also for the skills you will develop, the first-class scholarship you will publish, and the friends and colleagues with whom you will work over the next two years. I look forward to welcoming many of you into our community as staff members in the fall.

Sincerely,

Agnes Lee
Editor-in-Chief

The Georgetown Law Journal Volume 110
The Georgetown Law Journal deeply values diversity in both its membership and scholarship. During Write On, the Journal strongly encourages students to include a Personal Diversity Statement in their Write On submission. The Journal will extend 30% of membership offers to students who submit outstanding Personal Diversity Statements and have reached a certain threshold score on their Write On submission. As a reminder, students must opt-in to apply for the Journal to receive consideration.

Your Personal Diversity Statement should explicitly identify and discuss how your identity, background, culture, life experiences, and perspectives would contribute to the diversity of the Journal. If applicable, you may also describe any adversity that you have overcome, including discrimination, linguistic barriers, or a personal or family history of educational or socioeconomic disadvantages. Most importantly, please illustrate how the factors you identify affect the way you think about the legal profession, law school, and legal ideology and the ways you can uniquely contribute to the work and community of the Journal.

For example, some past Personal Diversity Statements have discussed how an applicant’s perspectives on legal scholarship and academia, or their decision to pursue a legal career, have been influenced by race & ethnicity, sexual orientation, gender identity, socioeconomic status, religion, disability, and other underrepresented identities.

Personal Diversity Statements should be double-spaced and should not exceed 750 words. Please include your Write On packet number, but not your name, on your Personal Diversity Statement and upload it to The Georgetown Law Journal box in the Uploads section of the Write On Competition website. All students are welcome to submit statements, and if you have any questions about the Personal Diversity Statement, please do not hesitate to contact the Office of Journal Administration at lawwriteon@georgetown.edu.
Dear First Year Students,

First off, congratulations on finishing your first year of law school! While you have many options for journals, we hope that you strongly consider the Journal of National Security Law & Policy. We are the only peer-reviewed journal devoted exclusively to national security law and policy.

If you have an interest or a background in national security law, the JNSLP is a great option. Our journal covers the entire spectrum of issues within the national security field from cybersecurity, to intelligence, International Human Rights Law, and the security implications of climate change.

The JNSLP takes a flexible approach to journal obligations with no required office hours. Furthermore, part-time and transfer students make a crucial contribution to our membership. As a member of the Journal, you will have two unique opportunities:

(1) All of our members write a student note on a national security law topic before their 3L year. We do not require our members to pursue publication, but our Executive Notes Editor provides individualized support and resources to students who would like to contribute meaningful scholarship. Additionally, our Faculty Editorial Board and LLM staff members also provide guidance and advice during the writing process.

(2) Each year, the JNSLP hosts a symposium in partnership with the Center on National Security and the Law here at Georgetown. Our members have the opportunity to take a senior leadership role in organizing and producing this event, which allows our members to interact with practitioners in national security. The annual symposium addresses current topics in the field, and the past symposia have focused on Shifting to Great Power Competition (2021), Presidential Emergency Powers (2020), The Continuing Threat of Nuclear Weapons (2019), The State of U.S.-Russia Relations & Unconventional Threats to U.S. Security (2018), Migration, Refugees, and Asylum (2017), Strengthening National Security by Protecting Public Health (2016), Trials & Terrorism (2015), Leakers, Whistleblowers & Traitors (2014), and Big Data (2013).

Because we place considerable weight on the required personal statement, please put careful thought into your statement. We hope to welcome you to the journal next year!

Sincerely,

Adam Silow
Student Editor-in-Chief
Journal of National Security Law & Policy
Dear Future Journal Members,

Thank you for participating in this year’s Write-On Competition! If you are applying to the Journal of National Security Law & Policy, we require a well-written personal statement.

The JNSLP deeply values diversity, and we welcome members from a wide range of backgrounds, including those with extensive national security experience, those hoping to pursue a career in the field, and those simply interested in the subject-matter. Your personal statement should demonstrate why you are interested in national security law. If you choose the second option, we encourage you to discuss how your diverse identity, background, culture, life experiences, and perspectives would help you to contribute to this Journal’s subject matter. We place considerable weight on the personal statement, so please make it a thoughtful submission. For the personal statement, please respond to one of the following two prompts:

1. If you have a desire to practice in this field, what is the basis for it? Which aspects of practice in this area appeal to you?

2. *How will your current or prior experience in this field, or your diverse background, help you to contribute to the Journal of National Security Law & Policy and its specific subject matter?*

Limit your personal statement to 500 words. Format your statement with one-inch margins and double-spaced, 12-point, Times New Roman font. Include a word count as your final line (which is not assessed against the 500-word limit). We will evaluate your personal statement for clarity of thought, conformance to the formatting requirements, and grammatical accuracy.

Because this is not a brief or legal analysis, do not cite to source material. This is your opportunity to showcase your individual background, passion, and interest in this specific area of law. For those wishing to highlight their diverse background, please make sure your statement relates to or connects with the Journal’s national security subject matter. Do not include your name or any other identifying information in your submission, in accordance with the Competition Instructions.

Please note that the personal statement is required. Write-On packets submitted without a personal statement will forfeit the entire score that the JNSLP assigns to this component.

Sincerely,

Adam Silow
Student Editor-in-Chief
Journal of National Security Law & Policy