Housing Options in Washington, DC Georgetown Law On-Campus Housing (Gewirz Student Center)

Georgetown University Law Center offers furnished student housing at the Gewirz Student Center at market rate. See Link for 2022-2023 Room Rates. The building is older than most of the nearby apartments, but its location on campus is extremely convenient for students. It is attached to the Hotung Building and the Scott K. Ginsburg Fitness Center and is only a short walk to the McDonough building and the Williams Library.

The dormitory consists of efficiencies and apartments. There are 1-bedroom, 2-bedroom, and 3-bedroom efficiencies. Students have a private bedroom, with a shared kitchen and shared bathroom. Unlike the apartments, the efficiencies have no living room. The apartments have bedroom options similar to the efficiencies, but the apartments have shared living rooms. Floor plans are available to browse here.

D.C. Housing Overview

The cost of living off-campus in a studio apartment will normally cost anywhere between $1,700 - $2,200 per month. A 1-bedroom will be a little more expensive. Lastly, a room in a house with 3 or 4 other people will be slightly less expensive than a studio or 1-bedroom. Students find housing in a number of different fashions, from personal research, to shared information via Whatsapp. We encourage students to verify all housing information as credible and legitimate before signing any contractual agreements for accommodation.

There are several apartments in and around the Law Center area that you can rent. You can see a comprehensive list, compiled by the Office of Residence Life, here: https://offcampushousing.law.georgetown.edu/

Please be aware of some renting requirements:

- 1. Security deposits most apartment rentals will ask for a fee up front called a security deposit. This fee is to protect the building from potential damages. If you leave the apartment with no damages, the security deposit will be refunded to you. Remember to budget correctly to include the security deposit.
 - a. You can ask for 1 month of rent estimate
- 2. Credit checks a credit check is when a landlord may look to see your credit/banking history. If you do not have a US credit card or US Social Security number, you will not be able to get a credit check. When looking at potential apartments, check to see if they do a credit check, and if they are willing to waive this requirement for you because of your international student status.

The off campus housing link provides several different resources for students, including housing checklists and tenant assistance: https://offcampushousing.law.georgetown.edu/resource.

Below is a list of nearby apartments. It is broken down by neighborhood (with an exception for the two complexes close to the Law Center). Although every apartment might not be included, this list should serve as a helpful starting point for finding housing in the vicinity of the Law Center. A majority of these housing options have additional amenities, such as a rooftop pool and/or a fitness center. Many of these housing options are also pet-friendly, and have washer/dryer in each of the units. Parking will depend on each complex, and parking fees will range in price generally between $150-$250/month. Each apartment complex is accompanied with additional information that may be helpful. Please note: All pricing is approximated from the information provided and is subject to change.

Neighborhood: H Street Corridor

H Street is a fun area in which to live – the whole street is filled with bars and restaurants. However, there is not an easily accessible Metro stop in the area. There is a free trolley (DC Streetcar) that goes from the East end of H Street to the West end, where the Union Station Metro is located. The Union Station Metro itself is roughly a 5-minute walk to campus. The Station House apartment building is on the easternmost end of H Street, offering the closest location to the Law Center (i.e., roughly a 10-15-minute walk). Here is a list of H Street apartments: H Street NE Neighborhood in Washington, DC

Other Options

Notwithstanding these options, there are many other living options available to students.

Some students live in Virginia (e.g., Arlington, Alexandria, Falls Church, McLean, Tysons Corner) and commute into the city on the Metro. There are multiple Metro stops in Virginia, and these towns have become a new place for young professionals who commute to DC Virginia | Washington DC

Other students live in Maryland (e.g., Silver Spring, Bethesda) and similarly commute into DC on the metro. There are also multiple metro stops in Maryland from the metro lines. The MARC train similarly runs into DC from Baltimore and Frederick and gives easy access between DC and Maryland. Things to Do in Maryland | Washington DC

Living options are ultimately an individualized decision, one not to be taken lightly given the higher living expenses that Washington, D.C. unfortunately demands. Living outside of the areas close to the law school is possible with the metro system. Georgetown Law is easily accessible off the Red Line at the Union Station and Judiciary Square stops. The following link has a great map of the metro line and can help students with finding a place to live: Navigating Washington, DC's Metro System | Metro Map & More.
