This applies whether the withdrawal pertains to an on-campus course, multiple courses, or a complete withdrawal from Georgetown Law.

Important Note on Federal Loan Refunds and Withdrawals

Refunds for students with federal student loans are governed by U.S. Department of Education regulations regarding the return of federal loan proceeds to the lender.

Students with federal loans are strongly encouraged to consult with the Financial Aid Office before initiating the withdrawal process.

Key points to understand:

- Federal regulations require students to "earn" financial aid daily as the semester progresses.
- For example:
  - If a semester has 100 days, a student who withdraws on day 30 has earned 30% of their federal financial aid.
  - Once a student reaches 60% of the semester, they are considered to have earned 100% of their federal aid.
- Withdrawing before the 60% point:
  - Requires Georgetown Law to return the unearned portion of federal loan funds to the lender.
  - May result in the student owing a balance to Georgetown Law, even if a tuition refund is issued per the published schedule.

 Always consult the Financial Aid Office before officially withdrawing to fully understand the financial implications.

Note: Georgetown Law's tuition refund policy is subject to change at any time due to updates in federal regulations or institutional policies.
